Refused to "Fall" for Bishop's Second Scheme

A western minister tells a story, according to the Kansas City Star, showing how a bishop, accosted in a Chicago street by a neat but hungry stranger, derived profit from the encounter.

Now the bishop took a fancy to the needy one, took him to a hotel and shared a good dinner with him. Yet having left his episcopal wallet in the pocket of a different episcopal jacket, he suddenly faced the embarrassment of not having the wherewithal to pay for the dinner.

"Never mind," exclaimed the guest. "I have enjoyed dining with you, and I shall be charmed to pay the price. Allow me."

And the stranger paid for the two. This worried the prelate, who insisted:

"Just let me call a taxi and we'll run up to my place, where I shall have the pleasure of reimbursing you. But the stranger met the suggestion with:

"See here, old man! You've stuck me for a bully dinner, but hanged if I am going to let you stick me for a taxi fare!"

Ebony Mentioned in Bible
The deep black heartwood, which is most highly prized in a number of trees of the ebony family, is mentioned in the Bible in Ezekiel 27:15, in connection with ivory, probably on account of their value and of their contrasting colors. Ebony was once supposed to grow in the ground "without root or leaves," and to it were ascribed many miraculous powers. The chief source of the ebony wood is the island of Ceylon, where huge logs of the pure heartwood are cut and hauled to the coast. For interior decorations and furniture ebony has been superseded by rosewood and mahogany, but for cabinet work it is still widely employed, being exported from Madagascar, Jamaica, India and Egypt. A species of the ebony tree which is used as a veneer also grows in the southern United States.—Washington Star.

Modern Noah's Ark
Barro Colorado Island was formed when the valleys about it were flooded by the impounding waters of the Chagres river to form Gatun lake, says the Detroit News. It resembles Noah's ark in that there gathered as the waters rose nearly every form of animal life in the vicinity, seeking escape from the rising flood.

Despite that it is only two miles from the Panama river, it has been found to harbor amphibians of new and strange habits as yet unstudied and innumerable species of insects never described, as well as many strange and exotic plants numbering 2,000 or more. It abounds with antenates, sloths, armadillos, peccaries, tapir, agoutis, coatis, the ocelot, the jaguar, many species of bat, monkeys of various kinds and the famous black howlers.

Blind People's Sense of Touch Gets Tired
Touch, the second sense the blind turn to (after hearing), has been perhaps most in the spotlight, but at the same time usually the most overrated of all the senses they utilize. First of all, it has a fatigue factor second only to smell, as tactile reading, its most conspicuous application, demonstrates.

Apparently, it should be as easy to read lines of embossed characters with the finger tips as it is lines of printed characters with the eye, once the alphabet is mastered. But it is not. Touch simply tires out. In his own case (and I have been reading by touch 18 years), says Charles McGee Adams in the Atlantic Monthly, two hours is the extreme limit for continuous reading, and long before that the end organs are so irritated and there is such a general restlessness that it is most difficult to proceed.

The general usefulness of touch is also limited by the fact that it is a motor sense; by which I mean that the fingers must be moved over the surface of an object, instead of merely brought in contact with it, if an impression is to result. Many of the seeing show they are not aware of this when they simply place the hand of a blind person on an object.

Reach, too, sets sharply defined bounds to touch's perspective, often resulting in a warped or fragmentary concept of an object, as Kipling's story of the six blind men and the elephant aptly illustrates. It is quite impracticable to touch many objects such as moving machinery, hot metal or live wires, at all—which restricts the usefulness of the sense still further.

Birds' Sense of Duty Helped Out Sportsmen

A fresh variety of an old yarn which may be familiar to sportsmen crops up in an Irish correspondent's letter to the London Field in the following form:

"One of our party amuses us with a tall story, classical in the district, viz, how he was coming up to shoot on the moor one morning in winter, all by himself, and saw sitting on the wall a grouse. Now, as has been observed, he was all alone, no witnesses, shooting for the pot and game was scarce. Therefore, contrary to all rules of sportsmanship, he fired at the sitting bird, but when the smoke of his black-powder cartridge had cleared away, there the grouse still was, sitting on the wall. So he fired at it again, same result; he expended 12 cartridges, still the bird remained on the wall. 'Well,' he says, turning to us, 'I thought the bird was bewitched; so I walked up to it, and it flew away, and I went on quite bewildered and would you believe it, on the further side of the wall I picked up 12 dead grouse. You see, there were 13 in the covey sheltered under the wall, and the one I first fired on was the sentry on the lookout for danger, and when he fell the next took his place, and so on."

Lost Her Lunch

When I was seventeen I weighed nearly 200 pounds. I had been invited to a picnic and had been asked to furnish two fried chickens. I boarded a street car so crowded that standing room was at a premium.

The conductor called a street, and a large passenger with two suitcases center-rushed through the crowd just inside the entrance. When the pressure was diminished a veritable rain of fried chicken began. First the drumstick went past, then the wings. I was too embarrassed to speak. When all the chicken had gravitated to the floor I edged away as if to disclaim any previous ownership.

My embarrassment reached its climax, however, when a motherly looking woman said: "Oh, look! The poor fat girl has lost her lunch."—Rehoboth Sunday Herald.

Regrowing Forests

The regrowth of timber provided for in the national forests where the original stand of timber is cut and removed varies with the forest types involved. In many forest types the regrowth is present in the form of seedlings or saplings at the time that the overstore of old and mature timber is removed. Where this is not the case carefully selected trees are left standing. From these trees come the seed that regenerates the area. In the case of Douglas fir on the Pacific coast, seed is stored up on such quantities in the duff on the ground that the best results are obtained by cutting the area clean and depending on this stored seed supply for regeneration. In some cases it is necessary to plant after cutting in order to insure a second crop within a reasonable time.

The Too-Perfect Woman

"Millicent did not make life easy. She meant so damnably well; there are moments when it drives one to hysteria to find all one's buttons on, and all one's socks darned; I couldn't discover a vice in Millicent, even in the linen cupboard. Millicent was a woman who lived in and mind to a sort of switchboard so magnificently organized that one only had to press buttons to get perfect life, food with enough profit in it, dinner-parties where the couples were properly sorted, donations to hospitals that would eventually lead one to knight-hood."—From "The Triumph of Galileo" by W. L. George.
