Tommy's Version.
The class was being examined by the local school inspector, and after a lapse of an hour or so the pupils were told to write an essay on "Oliver Twist."

While correcting the essays the inspector came across this sentence:

"In the kitchen stood the statue of a policeman."

Having no recollection of reading this in Dickson's famous book, he called the scholar and asked: "Tommy, would you mind telling me where you read this?"

"Certainly!" he answered. "It says in the book, 'In the corner of the kitchen stood a stone copper.'"—London Tit-Bits.

Using a C-Battery

The C or bias battery is a very useful adjunct to the audio-frequency amplifier, as it not only improves the operation of the set but also reduces the drain on the B-battery. However, if the B-battery has a potential of under 45 volts, the C-battery is unnecessary; for a 60-volt battery the C-voltage should be about 3 volts, and for a 90-volt B-battery the C-battery should have a potential of 4½ volts, and be connected with the negative toward the grid.

HIS JOB IS CHASING CLOUDS AWAY

Successful experiments in controlling atmospheric conditions were recently conducted by army air men stationed at Bolling Field, near Washington, D. C.
The process, evolved by Dr. Warren, of Harvard University, consists of a sand attack on the clouds via aeroplane—causing them to break up, preventing a storm and letting the sun shine through again.
In the above photograph, you see Captain A. I. Eagle of the Army Air Service filling the special containers attached to his plane with sand, preliminary to making an ascent above the clouds. Once above the snow masses, he releases the sand in a sort of spraying manner. The fine particles falling into the clouds cause the latter to spread and break up so that the sun might do its duty in clearing the sky.
It is reported that English authorities are very much interested in the process. It would be ideal and surely a blessing to London where the clouds and the fog are of severe density and always hang low.
Verily, what won't men govern next!
