Legislative Sidelights

By ELBERT BEDE.

STATE CAPITOL, Salem, Ore., Feb. 5.—Lane county is likely to be distinguished at this session as the only county which hasn't a bill to increase the salaries of its county officers.

The newspaper boys are in fine fettle for the remainder of the session. The biennial Steiner feed was held last night. The stories that were told by the feasters can not be repeated here.

C. W. Washburne, of Junction City, was a visitor here today, being interested in banking legislation and acting as bodyguard for the sylph-line Ed Bailey, also a visitor from Junction.

An interested spectator of the session is the young baby of Representative Randall, of Clackamas, who has brought his mother here to be near his father.

Ben Dorris, of the game commission is practically a permanent resident while the game program is being put over.

Representative Wheeler doesn't believe in taking much of the time of the session for long-winded oratory, which made it perfectly proper for him to object to the tactics of a few members who had their say and then moved the previous question to shut off further debate.

The title of a bill by Senator Eddy, which has passed the senate, makes it a crime to drive an automobile while intoxicated. Operators will please take notice and keep wood alcohol out of the radiators.

The legislature has come to the conclusion that, despite the surplus of the constitutional lawyers in its membership, it doesn't know it all, and a bill before the house would provide that the supreme court be authorized to enlighten the legislature upon constitutional points upon grave occasions.

TRANSPORTATION PROBLEMS DIFFICULT FOR PIONEERS

making this twice a year; as early as possible in the spring and as late as possible in the fall. They would bring back with them enough supplies to last the six months until the trip was made again. The shopping list of the housewife of those days, however, was marvelously simple as compared with that of the women today. As many things as possible were produced in the home and on the farm.

Many articles of furniture were made by the men in their own homes. Chairs, tables, cupboards and numerous other articles which are all handled in furniture stores now were made by these pioneers themselves. Many raw hide bottom chairs are still seen in attics of the houses of the older families of the communities.

But there were a number of things which even the energetic pioneers could not produce in their own workshops and on their farms. Flour mills were early established along the streams in the valley, but before the arrival of the miller much flour was hauled by wagon from Portland.

Sugar, salt, spices, and cloth were articles for which the early settler found he must make the long trip down the Willamette. If he delayed his fall trip a little too long and was caught in the rains there was a good chance that his wagon and team would mire up in some mud hole and he would have trouble getting back home. The idea that there would some day be a paved highway between Cottage Grove and Portland would have sounded strange indeed to one of the old citizens who had just returned from prying his wagon out of Camas Swale.

In all the journey there was no place that was any more difficult to get through than this swamp just the other side of Creswell. There is a story told by Mrs. Sinai Vaughn, in which she relates how their team of mules was mired up in this swamp until merely their heads were sticking out of the mud. On this particular journey to Eugene they were forced to stay all night in the Goshen school house before continuing on their way.

An enterprising man by the name of Coffman finally built a gravel road through this swamp and charged the public a quarter for each trip made through. This enterprise turned out to be very lucrative for its owner before it was finally taken over by the county.

There was a similar road south of Cottage Grove known as Ward's toll road so that the residents of the early day found it impossible to go either way without paying for the privilege of traveling on a gravelled road. At that the road was not always free from mud as it was merely a thin coating of river rock spread on the ground without any grading. It would have gone through in a very short time under the kind of traffic traveling over modern roads, but it served the purpose at that time.

The Willamette river was a very important means of transportation from 1850 to 1860. In those days high water was not looked upon with as much dread as it is at the present time, because high water meant that boats could come up the Willamette to Eugene and bring supplies from Portland. For many years boats made regular trips up the Willamette during the winter, especially after a number of stores were established in the valley.

People in this vicinity would then be able to get supplies without going all the way to Portland. Corvallis was easier to get to for the river craft than Eugene and many supplies were brought there. It was considered a great improvement when the early settlers could get supplies at Corvallis instead of going all the way to Portland.

First Chicks of Year Not Stopped by World's End

The end of the world so fearfully predicted by a sect of California religious zealots for last Friday failed to discourage a certain faithful buff orpington hen belonging to Mrs. Nettie Saling of south Eighth street. In spite of the doom predicted for that day this hen proudly strutted off her nest chucking loudly to 14 bewildered young buff orpington chicks who looked about the condemned world for the first time.

This is believed to be the first brood of chickens to come off the nest this year. Every egg was hatched and the chicks are contentedly chirping about the place as though they were well pleased with the world and had no fear of being swept away into eternity.

Mrs. Saling has two other hens which are expected to come off the nest with their broods in a few days.

Oakland Again Beaten By Junior High

On Saturday, February 7, the Oakland Junior high basketball team met their second defeat at the hands of the "Red and Blue" of the Cottage Grove junior high on the local floor by a score of 33 to 6. Glen Swanson, smallest player on the Cottage Grove team, made quite a sensation in the last quarter when he dribbled the ball around the court three times in a successful effort to shoot a basket.

The absence of Ray Adams from the Cottage Grove lineup was very noticeable. Ward, unbeatable at Guard could not replace Ray in the forward position. Goff played a brilliant game as running guard, holding his man scoreless and scoring seven points for his team. The "Red and Blue" quintet will meet Springfield here next Thursday afternoon at 4 o'clock. In a former game against Springfield the Cottage Grove team won 8 to 3. The next encounter between Eugene junior high and Cottage Grove junior high will take place here next Friday evening, February 13, at 7:30.

After the game with Oakland the girls of the local junior high served refreshments to both teams.

Vetch and Grey Oats Good Hay Crop for Spring

Planting common vetch and gray oats in February is safe for Willamette valley farmers who are short of legume hay for livestock feeding.

The usual rate of seeding, 80 pounds of vetch with about 40 pounds of gray oats an acre, is recommended by the experiment station at Corvallis. In this section south of Salem the planting should be normally before the first of March. In the section north of Salem, in those districts where there is a little more rainfall and where the spring growing season is a trifle cooler, the planting may extend into March a week or 10 days.

Even in this section the early planting is very much more certain of making a crop. Late planted vetch and oats are almost sure to be a failure.

Spray Program Issued for 1925 Use

An orchard program for 1925 has been issued for the benefit of Oregon growers by the state college extension service. The material composing it was gathered and arranged for this bulletin by H. P. Bars, plant pathologist, and Don C. Mote, entomologist, of the experiment station.

Because of different climate and other conditions fruit tree diseases and insects and their control are quite different in the part of Oregon east of the Cascades from that west of the cascades. Since these enemies of horticulture are more numerous and destructive in the western part of the state the main program is based on western Oregon needs, with outlines for the eastern districts following. Copies will be sent free upon request.
