Long and Short Lives in Scheme of Nature

Almost Evened the Series

Mrs. Smith wanted to go to the movies. Mr. Smith said he had put in a hard day at the office and was tired and would rather sit at home and smoke.

Soon the two were seated within comfortable seeing distance of the orchestra.

"Oh, don't you just love to hear the rattle of the kettledrums?" Mrs. Smith gushed.

And then the worm turned, albeit ever so slightly.

"Yes," Mrs. Smith replied. "Keep quiet!"—Kansas City Star.

Surveying the Seas

Plans for the most complete survey of the ocean ever attempted have been inaugurated by a conference representing scientific branches of the United States government and allied institutions.

One or more ships will be fitted out with a complete laboratory and equipped with the latest scientific apparatus for the first cruise.

The sea bottom will not only be mapped, but the composition of the water, its density, temperature, and currents which affect the distribution of marine plant and animal life, will be studied at all depths.

Five-sevenths of the surface of the earth is covered by water.

The water area can produce more food than all the land can ever be made to yield, and one of the purposes of the expedition will be to take an inventory of such food possibilities.

Unharned by Long Falls

Among the classic English falls may be mentioned that of a steeple-jack, who fell from the top of the church of St. George in Bolton-le-Moors to the ground, the whole distance traversed being some 120 feet.

The man's skull struck some sheet lead upon it, but though this fall was quite unbroken the man was only slightly injured and resumed work in a few days.

Not long ago a man with his shoes on fell from the top of a cliff at Dover, the height of which was afterward found to be 400 feet.

He was picked up floating in some five feet of water, but his shoes were off, which proves that he must have retained sufficient consciousness on reaching the water to enable him to draw his shoes from his feet.

New Palindrome Found

New palindromes are rare, but a western newspaper writer has revealed several especially good ones.

A palindrome is merely a phrase that spells backward and forward. A classic example of the palindrome is the speech put into the mouth of Napoleon: "Able was I ere I saw Elba."

Among the new ones sent was the following purporting to be a sign which a store manager placed over a rat-catching preparation composed of Dutch cheese and tar: "Rat trap made a la Edam, part tar." Years ago when "red root" was popular as a cure-all, a druggist's sign ran: "Red root put up to order."

Many a politician, blown into office by a popular gust, is blown out by the popular disgust.—Columbia (S. C.) Record.

No Smocks in England

It is only in American films, which are not distinguished by fidelity to fact, that English agricultural laborers still wear smocks.

Once only in my life have I seen a man in a smock, an old shepherd in Gloucestershire, who was so aged that he probably imagined that William the Fourth was still on the throne.

When a workman wears "jeans" or an overall, he does so, not as a trademark, but as a protection from the defilement of his trade.

He will not let himself be catalogued, the class war will not break out in England, because no one here, least of all a workman, will admit that he is in a class.—St. John Ervine in the Observer (London).

Souvenir Hunters Fooled

Craze for souvenirs is likely to be carried rather far at times. In the church of St. Andrews Under-shaft, in the city of London, is a monument to the author, John Stow, his figure being seated at a table writing a book.

In his right hand is a quill pen, which is renewed annually. Until recent years, this pen was continually being stolen, the souvenir hunters having the impression that it was the original pen with which Stow wrote his works.

"Madame? How did your young son learn to swim at such an early age?"

"Well, he began with the crawl stroke, of course."
