Marionettes, Mystery of Mechanics, Coming Wednesday
Cottage Grove will for the first time enjoy the production of a play by marionettes Wednesday, when Kegg & Goldsmith will present "Cinderella" in five acts at the Arcade theater.

A troop of little actors, called "marionettes," will bring a strange world, where dreams come true.

Wood, wire, silk and cotton, will take the place of flesh, blood and bones with these little actors.

Their heads, arms and legs are jointed in such a wonderful way that when the puppet master pulls their strings they sing, sew and dust and try on slippers, just as real people do.

They open the gates of the enchanted garden, where the fairy godmother lives and weaves the magic that transforms Cinderella into a beautiful princess.

You may enter the kitchen where Cinderella sits by her cinders and where Pixie, the cat, cheers her by dancing, and where the fairy godmother floats in on a shaft of purple light, where everything is so mysterious that you know something is going to happen—and it does.

A pumpkin changes into a carriage of gold, right before your very eyes, and rats, mice, and lizards will complete the equipage that takes Cinderella to the ball.

You'll be invited to the prince's ball in the castle, and when Cinderella enters, as the beautiful princess, you'll understand why the prince falls so madly in love with her.

The mechanical side of the marionettes fascinates everyone who see them. You find yourself picturing how it is done and what fun it would be to operate one.

You forget that it takes great skill and practice, it looks so easy.

All adults that attend are invited to go back of the stage at the close of the performance to snatch a glimpse of how the marionettes are made to perform.
