A WAY TO REDUCE TAXES.

The other day, in the postoffice lobby, we overheard the owner of considerable Cottage Grove real estate talking to a friend in strident tones about the figures on a tax statement which he had just opened.

As we left we noted that he had just received at the general delivery window a package which bore the label of a well known catalog house.

The amount that each person buys from out of the city that could be purchased in the city at approximately the same price as that charged by the catalog house for the same quality would support several merchandising emporiums in Cottage Grove alone.

The person we refer to was not a farmer, nor was he a member of the so-called laboring class. He was a resident of the city and the owner of considerable property.

A hundred thousand dollars in merchandise stocks put on the tax rolls in Cottage Grove would mean a substantial reduction in the amount of his taxes, city, school and county.

In Eugene the addition of half a million dollars of merchandise stocks to the tax rolls, and this could easily be done here, would materially cut the tax rate for city, school district and county. The resident of Cottage Grove would benefit by the cut in the county tax rate.

If in the entire county all goods were bought in the county that should be bought in the county, price and quality considered, the county tax rate might be cut in two.

So the Cottage Grove property owner who was kicking about his taxes, while carrying home a package bearing a catalog house label was joining with hundreds of others to keep up the tax rate he was kicking about.

Another tomb has been unearthed in Egypt. This tomb, it is thought, was the last resting place of one of the early prosecuting attorneys. In the sarcophagus were found records of several dollar-a-year men who made fortunes out of the Trojan war, in which it seems Egypt was an ally of Greece; a proclamation which evidently had never been given to the newspapers of the early days in which the children of Israel were granted their freedom; records of a democratic congressional investigation of alleged bribery on the part of oil barons in getting leases on the dome of the great pyramid, the chambers of the sphinx having been appropriated for use as storage reservoirs—also a papyrus which purports to be the original copy of the commandments and to have been lost by Moses before his hurried departure from Egypt. From a study of the scroll it seems that one commandment was never included in the Bible. It reads, "Thou shalt not get caught making moonshine whisky or breaking the traffic laws."

The Saturday Eugene Guard and the Sunday Eugene Register were interesting editions. The Guard issued a 52-page paper, made possible by a 16-page advertisement. This is the largest newspaper ever issued by a Lane county paper as a regular edition.

The Register was interesting to Cottage Grove because the first page of the automobile section was devoted to an illustrated story of Cottage Grove's industries, progress and inducements for the outer. The write-up was unusual from the fact that the business interests had not been asked to subscribe for advertising space, which usually is the case when newspapers "give" an illustrated booster story.

Here's one for Editor Ingalls, of Corvallis, who delights in himself propounding odd questions: Where is the old-fashioned husband who used to growl at his wife every time she held her skirt high or than her shoe tops on a rainy day? After Ingalls has answered that question, he may tell us whether the husband referred to is now working the shady side of the street for comfort or the sunny side for information.

Mr. and Mrs. George Currin, Mr. and Mrs. Charles McKibbin and Mr. and Mrs. Ira Beidler entertained the Jolly Bunch club Friday evening at their regular dance in Phillips hall. Dainty refreshments were served at the close of the dancing hours.

again down the hills, and near noon had the first sight of the Sacramento valley. We met Governor Norton going out to Carson valley to buy stock, and proceeded down and nooned in the valley. In the afternoon we traveled to within 8 miles of the city and stopped for the night, the wind blowing quite cold.

July 31—We started for Sacramento and arrived there at 10 o'clock and turned our stock to graze, while we took a stroll around the city. Jerry concluded to ranch his stock with Trendway and Norton and had them taken 8 miles to the ranch (which he now owns himself). We stopped in the city two days and then all started for the South Yuba river. Then I stopped taking notes and of course will have to be excused from continuing this lengthy and very poor description of our trip. I trust that no person will criticize it for I have but a very short time to write it in; and no leisure to correct mistakes in punctuation or grammar. Yours respectfully, A. DUCKER, ESQ.

COTTAGE GROVES ELSEWHERE

The Graves cottage became a rendezvous for horsemen and the name, "the cottage in the grove" gradually became widely known. Eventually the road leading to the Graves cottage became known as Cottage Grove avenue and the name finally received official recognition as such by the city of Chicago, which is a much different place than when Graves raced horses on the prairie.

Slater and two girls, Catherine Clark, 19, and Margaret Worden, 17, had spent three weeks in the Woodson auto camp. Their actions aroused the suspicions of Mr. Woodson, who asked the deputy sheriff to investigate. The girls also are from Washington and said that they had been paroled from the reform school there.

This was said to be the first time that a county judge in Lane county had imposed a sentence for a criminal offense.

WHAT CUP DO YOU QUAFF? SECOND OF A SERIES OF SIX ARTICLES

EAT, drink and be merry"—and tomorrow, the chances are, you'll be a fat old woman with a muddy complexion! That is, unless you eat and drink the right things, and use some discretion about the hours your merriment induces you to keep. Probably you've already given due thought to your eating and your hours, for those are rather obvious matters of concern to her who would be beautiful. But—what about what you drink?

It seems queer to me that articles about food as related to health and beauty do not place more emphasis on the importance of the liquid part of one's diet. Even specialists on the subject, even doctors, do not seem especially concerned about what you drink, so long as you "eat right." I am no specialist on the subject of foods; but I do know (and the application of that knowledge has a great deal to do with my recent success at Atlantic City) that the acknowledged "perfect food" is liquid; that all the beauty-getting fruits are, for the most part, water; and that many of them, such as oranges, lemons and limes, are often taken, with capital results, as undiluted juice, or in the form of "ades."

Consequently, I believe the cup you habitually quaff is of paramount importance. The almost invariable rule is: drink milk and water, and you have health and beauty; but drink tea, coffee, cocktails and you get a disagreeable disposition and a sallow skin! Perhaps, however, you do not realize just how perfect the "perfect food" is. In the first place, the scientist tells us it wins its name by being able alone to support the young of all mammals. The "quart a day" has now happily become the standard amount for children. And I believe it would be just as beneficial for all the average beauty-seeking grown-up (unless indeed there is fat to combat); for milk is an excellent source of certain important vitamins.

Of all the fruit juices, my favorite is that of the orange. And, since I think the time to take fruit is not with the meals, as is ordinarily done, but when the stomach is comparatively empty, I have my orange juice the first thing every morning. I've done this for so long that I don't believe I could "start the day right" without it. I often take the juice of an orange just before I go to bed, too. Apples, which also are largely composed of water, are my second choice among fruits.

But if you're one of those people who feel they "just must have something hot to drink at meals," try to find something that is non-stimulating, and at the same time not rich enough to be unduly fattening. For the rest, get on the "water wagon"—or on the milk wagon—and stay there.

What NEW YORK Learned
Whatever has been said for or against newspaper advertising. New York learned, during the time the newspapers could give no advertising on account of the pressmen's strike, exactly what it means to be left without newspaper advertising of the daily sales. Even Wall street, which takes but a comparatively small corner of the New York newspaper space, learned that its customers depend upon the newspaper announcements of financial offerings, and several large money offerings were postponed until newspaper advertising could be had.
Stores depending on special sales were most seriously affected. In lieu of newspaper ads the stores sent out printed circulars, but these were not nearly so effective as the ads, the managers admitted.
In the words of Hearn W. Street, one of the executives of Blair & company, a leading banking house:
"Investment bankers were not certain until the pressmen's strike began that newspaper advertising played a big part in their business. We know now what invaluable service the newspapers render us. It is next to impossible to put over a big bond issue without advertising. Our clients expect advertising and will not bother to read circulars."
The experience of New York in her "newsless" days should be of infinite value to anyone who doubts the effectiveness of newspaper advertising.
