Precipitous Corn Field. The hills of Calhoun county, West Virginia, are noted for their steepness. A tourist from some western state was driving along one day when he came upon a man struggling in the road just ahead of the car. The driver stopped the car and helped the native to his feet. "What's the matter my good friend; an automobile hit you?" inquired the tourist. "Hang it, no!" replied the native, pointing to a corfield above the road. "That makes the third time I've fallen out of that there corn patch this year."—Judge.
