THE LITTLE BIRDIES.

Of all the friends of mankind provided for in the arrangement of this great universe, the wild feathered songsters probably ask the least in return for the good they do.

The robin that twitters in the tree by your bedroom window, whose joyous music puts you in a frame of mind that bodes a happy day, would fly away if you should go to him with food. He is satisfied with what Nature provides.

The humming bird, flitting from flower to flower, in return for the nourishment he takes, cuts the bugs that would destroy the blossoms.

The canary, one of the greatest songsters, would ask nothing if not cooped up where he is unable to search for food. Taken from the great outdoors and penned into space a few inches square, the joyous spirit he shows under such a change of circumstances is one that might well be an inspiration to mankind.

Even the English sparrow, despised as he is, is a scavenger of no mean ability.

In return for being left alone, with no desire to intrude themselves where not wanted, a great majority of the feathered animals spend their lives in ridding trees and flowers of the bugs that would destroy them.

Yet we are told there are boys in Cottage Grove who, with slingshots, are killing and maiming these friends of theirs. A broken wing or a broken leg means a life of suffering for these little animals. To kill one is to destroy a harmless creature whose death can benefit no one and whose only purpose in life is to be useful.

The good book says that none of these can fall unknown to the power that created it, which undoubtedly means that He will not look lightly upon wanton destruction.

It is not at all likely that the little boy who speeds a stone that lays a little body quivering thinks of the cruelty; his parents have not explained it to him; probably he does not expect to hit the mark; but he will hit the mark once in a while, frail wings and legs will be broken; a useful life will be crushed out or a harmless creature will be left to suffer agony, and its joyous song changed to a chirp of despair. How much better it would be to build them little houses where they might lay their tiny eggs free from danger and rear their little fledglings where felines and other enemies could reach them not.

Things are stirring in the newspaper field at St. Helena. That good newspaper man, S. C. Morton, has disposed of The Mist to Ira B. Hyde Jr. and George D. Borden. Mr. Hyde was an employee on The Mist and Mr. Borden Oregon representative of the Mergenthaler Linotype company. This combination should be able to maintain the record Mr. Morton has set. At almost the same moment The St. Helena Sentinel made its bow to the public with Lew A. Cates as president and editorial director. Mr. Cates was publisher of The Cottage Grove Sentinel preceding its sale to Elbert Bede fourteen years ago. Recently he has been in the movie business at St. Helena and probably will continue that in conjunction with the newspaper business. Associated with him are J. M. Cummins and Frank W. Keating. The first issue of The Sentinel indicates that it will set The Mist a fast pace.

To remarry as soon after a divorce as the law permits indicates that some folks never will get an education.

Baseball Team to Be Organized.

At the conclusion of the basketball season the Lions plan to organize a baseball team that will participate in a regular league schedule as did the basketball team. The club is planning a stunt show for the near future as a means of defraying the expenses of the proposed team. The Eugene Pioneers will furnish several acts.
