

North Hill Climb at May Come Here

City Per Cent Grade Of Mount David Is Popular
With Motorcyclists.

Cottage Grove is likely to get this year's Pacific Northwest sectional hill climb. Application for the event has been made by the Cottage Grove and Eugene motorcycle clubs and riders who have participated in the annual hill climbing event for the Willamette valley, which has been held here for several years, are strong for the 80 per cent grade of Mount David for the Pacific Northwest event, which heretofore has been held at either Seattle or Spokane. The Willamette valley event has always attracted a crowd of about 3000 and it is anticipated that the Pacific Northwest event would attract even a larger number. Should it be held here, it is probable that it will combine with a monster lumbermen's picnic which the chamber of commerce and Lions club are sponsoring, to be held during the summer. This probably would increase the number of visitors in the one day to 6000 or 7000.

FREEZING WEATHER ONCE DURING MARCH

Only once during March did the temperature here get below freezing. That was on the 25th, when the mercury dropped to 25. The mean maximum for the month was 64.1, mean minimum, 36; mean, 50; maximum, 87. The precipitation was 54 of an inch, the lightest recorded in March for many years. There were 22 clear days, 5 partly cloudy and 4 cloudy. The weather for the month was unusual in many respects, particularly for its mildness.

Ditching Lorane Road Financed by Chamber

County Is Building Excellent
Road Considering Amount
Of Money Expended.

The chamber of commerce voted at its Tuesday noon luncheon to bear the expense of ditching two miles of the south Lorane road to prevent washing out of the rock grade. Immediate action was necessary, it was stated by C. E. Stewart, chairman of the road committee, because the county will within a few days move away the county road machinery which has been used there to resurface the road to the top of the mountain. Funds provided by the county and chamber of commerce have been exhausted and additional funds were necessary if the ditching was to be done. Automobiles are already using this road, which leads to the proposed logging operations to be started this summer by J. H. Chambers. It is in excellent condition considering the amount used in its improvement.

F. E. Mendenhall gave a comprehensive report of his attendance at the chamber of commerce secretarial school recently held at Eugene and appealed to members of the Cottage Grove chamber to profit by what others chambers have done in promoting the industries and welfare of their communities.

FROGS ARE IN MEADOW BUGS ON EVERYTHING

Balmy Weather Is Too Much For Anonymous Versifier.

(The Sentinel has received its first spring "pome" in an unsigned communication.)

Mr. Editor: Fearing you might not receive enough spring poetry, I am sending some which I hope you can appreciate, although it lacks the blue ribbon. Notice the beauty and pathos of these lines:

The frogs are in the meadow,
The birds are on the wing,
The green leaves are unfolding,
Bugs are on everything.

The sky is blue as azure,
And softly sighs the breeze,
While the cow is in the garden
Eating up all my peas.

The air is soft and balmy
As I gently row my boat,
And I do some fancy sneezing
For I did not wear my coat.

All nature's bright and joyous;
I roam the hills for hours,
And pick the lovely poison oak
When I am after flowers.

MANY VOTERS' NAMES NOT YET ON POLL LIST

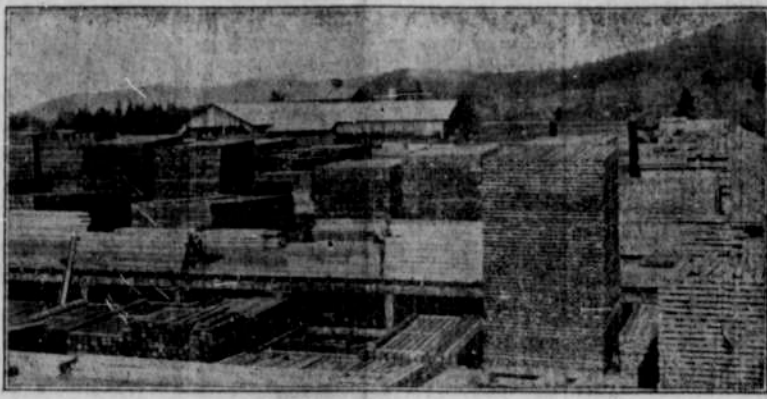

April 21 is the last day upon which voters can register for the May primaries, yet there are many in the country who will not be able to vote in May or will have to swear in their votes at the polls, unless there is a rush to get names properly on the poll lists during the 20 days remaining before April 21, according to R. S. Bryson, county clerk, who has charge of registration.

Those who have moved from the precinct in which they voted at the last county and state election are required to reregister. Those having voted at the last state election, if still living in the same precinct, need not register.

Lumbering, Cottage Grove's Principal Industry Is Likely to Have Pay Roll of Half Million

LUMBER DOCK SCENE AT ONE OF THE NUMEROUS
MILLS OF THE COTTAGE GROVE COMMUNITY.
(Reprint from Chamber of Commerce Booklet.)

Lumbering is Cottage Grove's principal industry. Some 30 mills employ more than 1000 men, with an annual payroll of over $1,250,000. This amount will be greatly increased during the coming year, when one company will double its present 20,000,000 cut in order to comply with its contract with the government to cut 350,000,000 feet in ten years. Incidentally this will be the government's first experiment in perpetual production. This ten-year cut will be from the first of ten units to be put on to the market at ten-year periods. At the end of 100 years, when the last of the ten units has been cut, it is expected that the first unit, upon which cutting is to start this year, will be again ready for the fallers.

In addition to the increased operation already referred to, logging railways are under construction to timber six miles west of here and from a mill eight miles south of here to timber several miles away. And a new 100,000-foot daily capacity mill is under construction at the edge of the city. It is probable that the city's lumbering industry payroll will be doubled within two years.

Lane county has eighty-four billion feet of merchantable timber—more than any other section of equal size in the United States—and of this amount thirty-four billion feet is tributary to Cottage Grove and will be cut and marketed here. Besides the magnitude of the lumbering operation itself, this presents an unprecedented opportunity for investment in wood remanufacturing plants, such as veneer and furniture factories, box factories, wood novelty plants and similar enterprises.

The RED RAIN MYSTERY by HEADON HILL

Begin Here Today.

SAMUEL HONEYBUN, English countryman, is suspected of the murder of—
SIR FRANCIS LATHROP by Adrian Klyne, private detective employed by Margaret, daughter of the murdered man. But Inspector Roake suspects—
SIR GUY LATHROP, Margaret's betrothed.

ADELA LARKIN assists Klyne in obtaining evidence from Wilmot, called Monkey Face. She is imprisoned by Monkey Face and is forced to write a decoy letter to Klyne.

But as Wilmot is about to drop the letter in the post box it is snatched from him by a unseen hand. He returns to the cave where the girl is in captivity. As he enters she asks, "Posted the letter?"

Now Go on With the Story.
"No, missy," he replied. "The letter is not in the post. Some devil came along and pinched it out of my hand as I was about to drop it in the box."

Adela's face yielded no secrets to the searching gaze fixed upon it. She was quite alive to his interpretation put upon her transient smile, and she saw the importance of not permitting any more thought-reading. Nor was she much eased down by the abstraction of the letter and the dismay it had evidently brought to the dictator of the letter. For Adela did not account for the "pinching" by the vagaries of some chance-met plunderer, but by the deep design of someone hostile to Wilmot.

And there was only one man she knew of hostile to Wilmot who was also capable of deep designs. If the letter had fallen into his hands all might yet be well.

A moment later she had reason to hope that her surmise was correct and that the letter-snatcher she had in mind would not be long in coming. Wilmot drew a knife cut her bonds and hauled her to her feet.

"Dance for me, dear," he ordered.

"I will, when I can move my limbs," came the answer with unexpected complacency. "At present I am too stiff for anything."

The knots he had tied rendered the plea for delay reasonable, and the wretch watched the girl glancingly as she regained suppleness by massaging her legs and working her arms in a graceful cat-like exercise.

Then she began to dance, at first swaying her body slowly side ways, but quickly changing the step to a rapid gyration which at brief intervals turned her back towards her delighted audience. But on facing him again after the third turn-about she halted in her tracks and Wilmot found himself staring into the muzzle of a dainty revolver.

"Put up your hands!" said Miss Larkin.

And immediately she broke into a gurgle of laughter, noting the consternation of her captor as he obeyed.

"Come off it, missy he protested. 'Lower that blasted pistol. It might go off, you not being used to such tools. This ain't a wild west show, and you ain't no bloomin' desperado."

But he negatived his pacific overtures by murmuring under his breath quite audibly:

"I ought to have searched the little—"

"I want the right hand a little higher," said Adela. Her tone was perfectly friendly, if rather contemptuous.

The right hand went up till a nod told Adela's human target that the desired elevation had been reached. The dexter hand of Wilmot was far enough from his hip pocket to give a sense of security.

There began a duel of eyes and wits, Wilmot fighting for an idea that might enable him to break down the girl's guard, and Adela prepared to encounter any devilry he might devise. At the slightest sign of movement she would shoot him, but she was sustained by the hope that the man of deep designs would arrive before she had to soil her hands with this foul creature's blood.

For three long hours neither of them stirred from the positions assumed when Adela leveled her revolver. She was beginning to despair of the letter having reached its addressee, or of his having been able to read the cipher message she had interpolated. What was to be the end of the present impasse if he did not come she could not foresee. She could not stand there aiming a pistol indefinitely. She would have to have food and drink or faint from exhaustion.

Pondering this, the question occurred to her: Why remain there at all? Why not march the delinquent to the police station in the village at the point of her pistol and charge him with assaulting her? The pleasure of the prospect was reflected in her eyes, and she ought to have been warned that its reflection on her enemy had tensed his muscles and prepared him for action.

"We have had enough of this," she said. "You will keep your (Continued on page 2.)

Root Knot Lemnates Appear on McKenzie

Drastic Measures to Be Taken
To Eradicate the Disease
Quickly as Possible.

The worst infestation of root knot lemnates ever known in the country has been found by County Fruit Inspector Stewart in the McKenzie river bottoms. About three acres of land are now infested, the disease attacking carrots, parsnips and cabbage. Because the flood waters of the river will carry this disease to other sections, drastic measures will be taken to stamp out the infestation at once. A calcium chloride gas treatment will be tried for the first time in the country.

For years the fruit inspector and his deputies have fought to keep this vegetable scourge out of the county, carefully inspecting even mail shipments coming in from other states. A number of hogs were kept for several years upon the land where the infestation has appeared and it is probable that the disease was carried by vegetables in the swill.

COUNTY MAY GO AFTER UNLICENSED CANINES

With less than 1000 dog licenses issued so far in Lane county this year, while there were more than 2100 last year, steps will have to be taken to force dog owners to acquire licenses, according to members of the county court. The license price doubled March 1 and this higher price seems to have caused a heavy slump in business as far as tag sales are concerned. The Marion county plan whereby an inspector is employed to hunt out unlicensed dogs may be adopted here.
