The entire Robison family had been attacked by ptomaine poisoning. The family doctor was called, and after treatment had been administered he tried to discover the source of the trouble.
"Did you all eat something that had been left standing in a tin?" he asked.

Mr. Robison thought hard for a moment, then:
"By George, doctor," he cried, "that's just what we did. Yesterday we went out to watch the fox-hunting and we left our lunch in the car all the morning."

Of Course Pop Knew

All About Philistines

"Pop, my Sunday school book says to write a short story about David and the Philistines. How shall I begin it?"

"Hm, yes—David. David and the Philistines. The Philistines and David. Well, let me see: 'Once upon a time there was some—there were some—people with a king named David.'"

"The Philistines, pop?"
"Now don't interrupt. Just listen carefully. . . . 'with a king named Philistine.'"

"Aw, pop, you mean David!"

"I said David. Why aren't you listening? Anyhow. . . . 'This king of the Day—of the Philistines wanted to conquer some people called the—called—a'"

"The Philistines, pop?"

"No, of course not! Why should a king want to conquer his own people? Will you listen or shall I stop?"

"But, pop, David did beat Goliath—or something. . . ."

"That's it. That's it. David and the Philistines beat the Gauls by building a wooden bridge. I remember it all now. . . . Well, soon after—"

"Say, pop, I guess I remember now, too."

"Good! Well, run along then, and I'll finish my paper."

Arrive as Strangers

in National Capital

One of the outstanding features of Washington's difference from other capitals of great countries is that it is not—as are London, Paris and Berlin—the most important of our cities, nor indeed a city at all in that sense, writes Maude Parker Child in the Saturday Evening Post.
Therefore most of the appointees who come to our capital come as strangers. In other countries the chances are that a man chosen as a cabinet member will be known in his own capital and will have a wide acquaintance there. His social status will have been established long before he becomes part of the government.

In the United States, however, a new official may come from a town as remote geographically from Washington as Constantinople is from Dublin. His wife and children may have never even seen the city of their new residence until they go there to live. It is possible that they may not have one friend who is a resident.

This applies equally to the under-secretaries and to the innumerable men of the State department, but it is usually more acute in the cases of senators and congressmen.

Sumthin' Missin'

Aw, shucks, I ain't so crazy 'bout my father's new machine. There's such a thing as havin' things too fine. He went and bought the bunch of us a classy limousine. The best that he could buy—but not for mine.

Ya know how people feel about a thing that's spankin' new. They're allus 'fraid of mars and scars and such. And every time I'm in it pop'll watch each thing I do. That's why I can't enthuse about it much. The seats 'er all upholstered with a cloth of silver gray, an' all the wood and metal's shiny bright. But that don't mean a thing to me. I just found out today they wouldn't let my dog in. That ain't right.

Aw, what's the fun of ridin' when I leave my purp behind? I hate to see him whine an' fume an' fuss. I don't see why my father didn't wait and try to find a plain old common second-hand bus.—Detroit News.

An Ancient Chinese Code

In China, where a vast system of waterways serves to connect different sections of the country, in ancient times it was the custom to send signals along the water by holding a huge metal gong close to the surface and pounding out code messages. These gongs were known by different names and were used in war to summon troops or tell of enemy movements. There are but four or five of those ancient primitive telegraph instruments now in existence, according to the information I have. One such gong was sold some few years ago by a collector of Chinese antiques living in Chicago to a wealthy collector in London.—Mr. Woodward in Adventure Magazine.

Spoiled the Effect

Mr. and Mrs. Bailey were entertaining friends.

"Yes, I think I must get a car this year," said the host, casually, during a lull in the conversation. "I haven't decided what make yet, but it's no use getting a cheap one; they're sometimes so unreliable. I suppose I can get a really serviceable little affair for $1,500 or so?"
While the company was still chattering at this careless mention of wealth, Bailey junior remarked: "I say, dad, will that funny-looking man call every week for the money like he did last year when you bought the bicycle?"—Exchange.

Weaving Genius

Until the close of the Eighteenth century all fabrics carrying colored designs were woven entirely by hand. About 1801 Joseph Marie Jacquard invented an attachment which is placed at the top of a loom and automatically selects strands of yarn required to form the patterns and draws them up to make the surface of the cloth and at the same time leaves the other strands to form the back of the fabric. The attachment has ever since been called the Jacquard. The invention was first put into commercial use in 1809 in France.

The Question

"I don't see how we can go to Europe this summer."
"You know it's on the children's account."
"Yes, but have they that much in the bank?"—The Harvard Lampoon.

BARKER PLANS TO HAVE LARGE CHICKEN FLOCK

John Barker is making extensive improvements on his property preparatory to going into the chicken business on a large scale. Tractor Turns Turtle With Driver

London, March 31.—(Special).—Glen Banton narrowly escaped serious injury Tuesday when a tractor turned turtle with him. The tractor had skidded into a ditch and a team of horses was being used by J. E. Banton, father of Glen, in an effort to get it out on dry land. The chain broke and the machine turned upside down as it dropped back into the ditch. Glen jumped from the tractor's seat as the machine went over.

Thomason Is Severely Injured

Vern Thomason, employe of the Bohemia Lumber company, sustained a gash on his left arm Saturday while resetting the knives of a planer. The monkey wrench which he was using slipped and he fell against one of the knives, cutting a gash from the little finger to the upper part of the forearm. He will not be able to return to work for several months.

LOCAL TRAPSHOOTERS ARE WINNERS AT LAST

The Cottage Grove Rod and Gun club scored two wins yesterday in the Oregonian telegraphic shoot by defeating the Bend trap club 73 to 72 and by default from the Astoria Gun club. Yesterday's victories lifted the local club out of the cellar position, giving it an average of .111 with 2 wins and 16 defeats. H. H. Veatch made a perfect score, breaking 25 in a 25-bird race, the first perfect score that has been turned in by the local trapshooters. Other high scores yesterday were N. J. Nelson Jr., 24, and C. A. Bartell, 24.

Many Read Library Books

During March 1554 books were borrowed from the Cottage Grove library. Of this number, 948 were fiction, 68 were non-fiction and 538 juvenile. Twenty-seven new cards were issued and 115 books mended. Thirty-four books were purchased and fines were $8.64.
