Name of Washington Handled Too Freely

The practice of naming negro slaves and grog shops for George Washington brought a vigorous protest from the Missouri Intelligencer of Old Franklin a quarter of a century after the death of the "Father of his Country." This was the first newspaper in the United States published west of St. Charles, Mo. In the issue of April 20, 1823, the Intelligencer registered this editorial protest against the promiscuous use of Washington's name:

"This is the Christian name of one-eighth of the masculine inhabitants of the United States. This name was dear to every American when it conveyed the idea of the father of freedom, but now it serves no other purpose than that of distinguishing one part of mankind from the other. It is universally made a very packhorse. Every stupid blockhead thinks it the greatest tribute of respect he can possibly pay to the memory of the hero to call a son, a negro or a grog shop by the same name. It is a practice scandalously common for publicans to paint the likeness of the hero on a board, hang it on a post by way of a sign, hold it up to the vulgar to gaze at as boys gaze at a monkey, and to beguile silly travelers to become their guests, who judge of what is in the house by the sign. What has the father of liberty done that his name should thus be consigned to infamy and his likeness to contempt?"

History's Long List of Great "Southpaws"

Cheer up, all ye southpaws. A deliver into obscure matters of history has unearthed something that should please each and every one of you. It is really something to give you reason to put on airs of superiority. Are you not pleased to learn that Alexander the Great used his sword with his left hand? Charlemagne, the patron of scholars, used his pen with his left hand. If he did any writing at all. Also the Pharaohs were left-handed and so were the greater Caesars. In the period between 2500 B. C. and 15 B. C. a left-handed man was considered "the darling of the gods" and was rushed into high office. Yet, the left-handed have had to suffer under instructors who tried to make them change a physical habit. Even some educationalists claim that left-handed pupils fall far below the average level of school efficiency. In fact, the left-handed have been feared at probably everywhere except on the baseball field.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Old Monarchical Idea

The name "Divine Right of Kings" is given to a doctrine that was promulgated in England in the Seventeenth century. It asserted that kings held their authority by divine appointment and were earthly representatives of the Deity. This principle relieved the sovereign of all responsibility toward his subjects, and gave him absolute claim to their obedience. The chief defenders of this dogma were Salmasius, Hobbes and Sir Robert Filmer; while Milton, Algernon Sydney and Harrington were its uncompromising opponents. The controversy died a natural death on the accession of the House of Hanover. In the Bill of Rights (1689) the right of the people to depose the sovereign, to alter the order of succession, and to confer the sovereignty on whomsoever they may think proper is distinctly set forth.—Kansas City Star.

Initiative Wins

When initiative is absent, we become mechanical beings with no keenness for advancement; and if all were afflicted that way the world would cease to progress; for we are here today just because men of initiative have acted in the past. So it is well to be buoyant and brisk and to take another step which will bring a benefit both to ourselves and others.

The are thousands of things in life that are ours if we will but claim them; but we have failed because we have never heard their call, or thought the call was to someone else and not to us. We need to arouse ourselves and go in and possess, otherwise we shall be left behind.—Exchange.

Crops North of "53"

Wheat, oats and similar grains have been found to ripen satisfactorily in that part of Canada north of the fifty-third parallel. Four varieties of wheat have been tried, some ripening in ninety-eight days. The yields varied twenty-three to forty bushels, depending on the variety, and from fifty-four to seventy-three bushels of oats to the acre were obtained, depending also on the variety planted. The experiment is considered important for Canadian development.

Pointing Out Duty

The object of preaching is constantly to remind mankind of what mankind is constantly forgetting; not to supply the defects of human intelligence, but to fortify the feebleness of human resolutions.—Sydney Smith.

Red Rain Mystery

have been up to something beastly, or you wouldn't be wearing those things. Where is my son? What have you done to him?"

Wilnot raised his arms again, but changing his mind, lurched across the room to pick up the file. "Mr. James is where I'm going to send you," he snarled, "unless you think better of it. Make up your mind right smart, afore I lose my patience with you."

Those were the last words uttered by Wilnot as a free man. The fettered wrists were in the act of descending on the gray head when Roake and Klyne rushed into the room and flung themselves upon him. Uniformed members of the county police followed and assured the surrender of the murderer.

Fresh handcuffs were fitted on him and he was led away gibbering obscene profanities at his captors. Roake turned to the shrinking figure in the chair.

"Take another tot of whisky, Mr. Honeybun," he said. "You look as if you needed it. We should have been here, thanks to Mr. Klyne, in time to forestall that brute but for a burst tire on the road. Fortunately it occurred near the police station, so we were able to pick up reinforcements. You ain't hurt are you?"

Mr. Honeybun shook his head. "My son is dead?" he quavered irreverently in his senile falsetto.

Klyne stood forward. A smudge of his hand across his face had already restored him to the semblance of his natural self. He had not altered his features much when he personated Mr. Hiram Z. Cable, the American connoisseur of old furniture. Mr. Honeybun showed by a sickly smile that he recognized the tentative purchaser of his Chippendale sideboard and knew him for what he was.

"Listen to me, sir," said Klyne. "My friend Inspector Roake is in charge of this case, but a few things have come my way as a private investigator. Your son, James Jessick, as he should rightly be called, is dead, killed by the outrageous monster who would have killed you but for our intervention. I should recommend candor, Mr. Samuel Jessick. I have your life history at my fingertips, and I am willing to admit that, since you were under a grievous misapprehension, there was some justification for your attitude towards Sir Francis Lathrop—none, of course, for the crime you abetted your son in."

The old man was weeping bitterly. "If Jem is dead I have nothing to conceal," he faltered. "I don't care what becomes of me. Do you mean, by a grievous misapprehension that Lathrop married my daughter?"

"I do. I can show you a copy of the marriage certificate granted at the Strand registry office."

The apple-cheeked master of the larches had gone all to pieces. His knees knocked together. He failed to articulate clearly.

"Then we have sinned to no purpose," he wailed. "I hope that my son did not know that before he died?"

"He did not," Klyne replied, secretly glad that he had spared the departed malefactor that knowledge.

"I will not put you to the pain of describing your crime," Klyne's fine voice was very gentle. "I have opportunities, denied to Inspector Roake because of his official position, for reconstructing the story of that fatal night. But you would confer a favor on us, Mr. Jessick, if you would describe exactly how Wilnot came into the case. He will have to be tried for your son's murder, also for that of Blissett, Mr. Roake's assistant, and we are not quite clear on all points. A little help from you will enable us to present the case to the court in a proper light. And it won't do any harm to assist the authorities."

"I add my official endorsement to that," said Roake pompously, producing his note book. Klyne, in describing the scene afterwards, affirmed that what surprised him most was the docility with which the inspector had come to heel like a little dog. He was almost licking his lips at the prospects of the unearned credit that would accrue to him. The old culprit whom Klyne had re-christened Samuel Jessick expressed his willingness to oblige.

"Wilnot, as doubtless you know," he began, "was chauffeur to Mr. Wilford Symes of Long Paston manor. On the evening when I and my misguided son set out to wipe off what we thought was an old score against Sir Francis Lathrop, Wilnot had driven Mr. Symes to a dinner party some way off. Expecting to be late and to be brought home by a friend, Mr. Symes sent Wilnot back with the car which, like my son's, happened to be a yellow one. Wilnot was passing along the lane behind the grange and saw Sir Francis get into our car, which we had left in the lane while we went up to the house to persuade Sir Francis to accompany us home to inspect some antique furniture. When we had our way with him we returned, and, backing the car against the boundary wall, flung the body over into the grounds where it was eventually found."

Klyne nodded. "The trace of yellow paint on your car left on the wall was what set my ball-rolling," he said. "Well, sir, Syme's chauffeur started to blackmail you as soon as the news of the baronet's death got about."

"He came over next day, and after threatening to accuse us, insisted on being taken into my son's employ. Since then, while profes-

Another Cottage Grove Is Found.
Another Cottage Grove has been found. P. E. Mendenhall, secretary of the chamber of commerce, has received from a girl living at Houston, Texas, a request for a copy of the Cottage Grove booklet. She said that she lives in a suburb called Cottage Grove and that she attends Cottage Grove high school.

EUGENE OIL WELL BIT IS DOWN TO ASPHALT

Drillers at the Eugene oil well of the Guaranty Oil company report for some time the big bit has been pounding its way through asphalt. David E. Olson, president of the company, has stated that this indicates that quantity probably will take the place of the quality expected when the structure was rock-capping. The drill is pounding away close to the 3000-foot level and Olson is firm in his belief that the prediction of oil in paying quantities at between 2000 and 3500 feet will be fulfilled.

MORE MILES TO THE GALLON

in all three

And all three are important—the start, a sustained flow of dependable power, economical mileage. But, to satisfy 999 out of every 1000 motorists, these three results must be combined in proper proportion.

If you are one of the 999, you will like Associated. For Associated Gasoline is refined so as to have a distinctive range or chain of boiling points. As a result, Associated gives you—in perfect coordination—(1) satisfactory quick starting, (2) a full stride of power, (3) mileage. Associated is always associated with "more miles to the gallon."
