Society

Mrs. James P. Graham was elected president, Mrs. D. H. Hemenway vice president and Mrs. Charles S. Hall secretary-treasurer of the Constellation club at the meeting held Thursday in Masonic hall. The retiring officers, Mrs. S. L. Godard, Mrs. Hiram Griggs and Mrs. Merville Veatch, were joint hostesses for the meeting. Following the business session the afternoon was spent socially. Snappers and sweet peas in pastel shades were attractive table decorations and roses were about the rooms. A dainty two-course luncheon was served. Mrs. S. L. Godard, retiring president, was given a beautiful lamp by the club and the retiring officers presented each guest with a gladiolus bulb.

Mrs. S. S. Lasswell was hostess Thursday at a bridge luncheon, honoring Mrs. B. G. Koehler, who left Saturday for Bogalusa, La., to make her home. Guests were Mrs. F. L. Grannis, Mrs. L. C. Liston, Mrs. W. H. Daugherty, Mrs. C. J. Kem, Mrs. Raymond Grube and Mrs. E. W. Frans. Luncheon was served at 1 o'clock and the afternoon was spent playing bridge. Mrs. F. L. Grannis received first prize and Mrs. Koehler the guest prize. Baskets of spring flowers were the room decorations and an artistic bowl of choice roses was the table centerpiece.

Friday night was children's night at Eastern Star. Following a brief business session, children of members entertained with a program which represented the contents of any present day magazine. The cover was a flower garden scene. As a curtain number Elbert and Evelyn Smith gave a piano duet. A number of little ones acted the story, "The Pied Piper." A curtain number was given by two Choral club girls, Dorothy Dahsen and Margaret Land. Spring fashions and sports were pantomimed. Miss Frances Mackin gave a piano solo and the closing number was representations of popular advertisements.

Pirate Perch Turns

Sunfish Out of Nest

Sunfish are troubled with what may be called a marine cuckoo—the pirate perch. This fish, which is either too lazy or else incapable of making a nest of its own, waits until the sunfish have completed their nest and then turns them out, installing itself in their place. Its eggs are frequently laid among those of the original occupants. These, however, are not disturbed and hatch out in due course, says the Vancouver Province.

Perhaps the most interesting nest found under water is that of the black-nosed dace. The fish clears a space about two feet in diameter and the female deposits a layer of eggs. Then a layer of stones is gradually placed over the eggs, the stones being brought to the nest in the mouth of the dace. On these another layer of eggs is placed, and then comes another layer of stones. These alternate layers of eggs and stones are slowly built up until the pile reaches a height of eight inches or so.

The black goby forms a home for eggs like a ball. This is constructed of pieces of weed interwoven and bound together, the eggs being placed inside. As is often the case, the male builds the nest, and after the eggs have been deposited, takes it in turn to guard it.

Hardly Draw Breath

During Winter Sleep

The mild weather sometimes observed during winter occasionally wakes before their time animals which have been spending the winter buried in the ground or in trees. While these creatures are asleep, often for months, respiration seems to be totally suspended.

A hedgehog was recently immersed in a pail of cold water, and though the ducking was continued for 30 minutes the animal was taken out unhurt. So slight was its breathing that practically no water entered its lungs.

Marmots and bats have been placed in glass chambers filled with carbon dioxide. In their normal state they have expired almost immediately; but in their winter sleep they have survived after four hours in the glass chambers.

Extreme cold will sometimes kill six months' sleepers, but there have been notable exceptions in the case of animals with cold blood. Occasionally fish have been brought to life when taken from solid blocks of ice; frogs have been known to recover after ice has formed in their blood.

Tribute to Franklin

For 68 years Benjamin Franklin served his country and mankind, and history affirms the judgment of his contemporaries, expressed most notably in the tribute adopted by the national assembly of France upon announcement of his death. Offering the resolution, which was seconded by Rochefoucauld and Lafayette, Mirabeau declared:

"The sage whom two worlds claim as their own, the man for whom the history of science and the history of empires contend with each other, held without doubt exalted rank in the human race. Antiquity would have raised altars to this mighty genius, who, to the advantage of mankind, compassing in his mind the heavens and the earth, was able to restrain alike thunderbolts and tyrants. Europe, enlightened and free, owes at least a token of remembrance to one of the greatest men who have ever been engaged in the service of philosophy and liberty."

Old-Time Hosiery

Hose is really the old term for what amounted to our modern trousers and stockings combined, our ancestors at one period wearing a garment something like the "legginette" now so popular for small children.

The centuries passed and the fashions changed. First breeches and then trousers came in, and the old one-piece garment disappeared. We still kept its name, however, but only applied it to the tight-fitting covering of the lower limbs, and even this in time we took to calling by another name—the stocking. This name is a form of the word stock, which means in this case, part of the trunk.

Had Benefit of Climate

The homes of the ancient Romans were imperishable because they were erected in a climate wherein there was practically no freezing and thawing. The same mortars used in our climate have not been at all successful. Furthermore, the same stones used by the Romans give a comparatively short life in our country. The mortar was mostly used by the Romans was a mixture of lime and sand. To this was added some natural occurring ground volcanic rock. This corresponds to what is known as puzzolana, which, as indicated, has not been found satisfactory here.

Supported by Eight

Calhoun Clay was a typical modern parent. As he loomed in front of the garage a minister stopped and said:

"Cal, why don't you go to work?" "Seize me, sah," Cal answered with dignity. "Ah's got eight chillun toe support—"

"Well," interrupted the minister, "you can't support them by loafing here in front of this garage." "Seize me, sah," Cal went on. "Low me ter finish mah remark sah. Wot Ah means ter say is dat Ah's got eight chillun toe support me."

Victor in Life's Race

Life is a test of fitness. In running his race a man should be able to pass the winning post with head up, heart light, eye clear, and conscience at peace. If he can do so he is not "one who also ran," but the captain of his own destiny.—Grit.

Pedestrian: "Say, you just missed me."
"Motorist: "Well, stand still and I'll try again."

Folks that get divorced inside of a year after getting married ought at least to be fair enough to give back the wedding presents.

Many a chap who thought he loved at first sight has been entirely cured when he took another look.

In Settling Up.

The smart young man approached the hotel proprietor.

"Look here," he said, "I want you to settle a little argument that has arisen between me and my friend here. I said I was coming to you to pay my bill."

"Very glad to hear it," said the proprietor. "But what is wrong with that?"

"Well, my friend says I ought to have said your bill. That's the point."

"Come to that, I suppose it is my bill."

"But you said it was my bill just now."

"So it is—your bill and my bill, too."

"In fact, then, you contend that it's our bill?"

"Of course it is!"

"Well, that suits me all right. If it's our bill, of course we divide it. Just make out my half, will you? There's nothing like getting things straight."—Tit-bits.
