BUSTER KEATON CALLS MANY FROM OUTSIDE

"You look bigger than you really are, anyway."

The salad and spinach arrived.

"My, this is just like Hollywood."

Hotel Service Is Liked.

"You have splendid hotel service here. When we learned that we were going to be dumped into a small town, we had visions of hotels probably much like the ones to be shown in our picture. The first thing you think of when you are going somewhere to stay several months is, 'What will the hotels and restaurants be like?'"

Miss Mack's big brown eyes innocently charm from under long eyelashes. If she was made up she didn't show it. She doesn't need it. A moment's chat with her explains why she was picked to play the part of a southern belle of the Civil war period.

In the picture, Keaton, who volunteers for the southern forces and is refused admission to the army because of his greater value as an engineer, is taunted for cowardice, but in his fight to save his engine and to rescue the southern maid, Virginia, he is acclaimed for his bravery. Anyone would demonstrate bravery if given an opportunity to rescue so charming a maid.

MISS MARION MACK.

Who plays opposite Buster Keaton in the picture, "The General."

We found a pleasant surprise

"Yes, this is the first time I have ever gone to a small town for a picture."

"How does it seem to be dropped down here for several months?"

"Oh, it's glorious. We are enjoying ourselves immensely. Everything has been made so pleasant for us here. Your country is so different. Your people are so cordial. It is almost thrilling. You know, I came from a small town, a much smaller one than this."

Hollywood Is Like Other Cities.

"How does social life in Hollywood compare with social life here?"

"Much the same. We are just a great big overgrown village. There are probably 150,000 people in Hollywood, 50,000 of them on the movie payrolls, but we are much the same as people in any other community of similar size. There are no more wild parties there than elsewhere, but you hear all about any that we have. You hear about our real home life, our real life that we live along with the make believe."

Four or more locations in Cottage Grove will represent the southern village of Marietta. The railroad restaurant at Kingston will be at the McLin place near Dorena and Big Shanty will be at Dorena. It is from Big Shanty that a train is to be stolen. Another location is now being built at Wildwood.

Not What Was Expected.

When the farmer's will was read it was discovered that he had given no instruction as to who should inherit his farm and the two sons therefore quarreled over the division.

However, eventually the brothers decided that they would put the case before the local patriarch and abide by his decision. It is said that each of them dangled a tempting bribe before the old man.

"Well," said the patriarch as he prepared to give his answer, "since there is no statement, it is only right that the elder brother should divide the farm."

"Just what I said!" applauded the elder brother, and passed him a wad of bills.

"And when that is done," continued the old man, ignoring the interruption but pocketing the money, "the younger brother shall choose which half he wants."
