Personal Taste and Charm Are Expressed In the Personal Car

The woman who drives a Chrysler "70" instinctively knows herself becomingly equipped. For the fit of her car—its suitability to her personal needs and its adaptability to her temperament—is quite as important as the perfection of her personal apparel. And unless her car be worn with the same ease, the same careless grace, it is as irritating as a disappointing hat.

In its ability to suit the needs of the discriminating woman rests much of the popularity which the Chrysler "70" enjoys among members of the Junior League, the Garden Club, the Needlecraft Guild of America—and discerning women everywhere. There is, first of all, a series of exquisite silhouettes and a variety of the newer colorings which are both distinctively smart and distinctively Chrysler.

A woman handles her Chrysler, also, with the unconscious poise which attaches to a gown by Paquin or a frock by Lanvin.

She is conscious, too, of a fine response to her wishes—flashing acceleration, a wealth of power for speed or pull, amazing flexibility—and the comforting safety assurance of Chrysler hydraulic four-wheel brakes. And because she is a woman, she doubly senses the luxury of joltless motion provided by the Chrysler designed springs, balloon tires and Watson Stabilizers.

The Chrysler "70" is made mechanically superfine not alone to enthrall the motorwise man, but more particularly to relieve those who know nothing of machinery from all mechanical drudgery.

Ask the women you most admire how they like their Chrysler "70." And become acquainted by personal experience with the Chrysler "70." You will find the nearest dealer eager to demonstrate both its unusual ability and its charm.

Chrysler "58," "70" and Imperial "80" models priced from $845 to $3695 f. o. b. Detroit. Nineteen body styles.

RIGHT TO CHARGE TUITION IS QUESTIONED

Cottage Grove, Ore., June 9.—(To the Editor.)—I read with considerable interest the threat of the chairman of the Cottage Grove school board to charge tuition for the high school students from the outside districts who have turned down the board's pet union high school promotion scheme.

I am assuming that the chairman of the board, in giving this interview to the Sentinel, spoke with the full authority and sanction of other members of the board. Since the board has stated that it can legally charge this tuition from the high school students of these ten outside districts, perhaps it would not mind giving us its legal references to the Oregon school laws on which it bases its authority to charge this tuition. It may be, if the board will get some reliable legal advice, it will conclude to hunt some other way to take out its spite on the outside districts. In addition to a sum equal to Cottage Grove's contribution to the county high school fund, Cottage Grove is drawing from this county a sum which more than compensates her for the expense of taking care of the students from these ten outside districts. The outside to Cottage Grove's contribution to the high school (through the high school fund) out of all proportion to their student population. The chairman of the board, with all his vociferating, has not been able to show this community any moral right to gouge the countryside and the industries. Now let him show a legal right.

J. FARRAR WOODARD.

(Editor's note.—In view of the fact that the above refers to a news item in The Sentinel in which the chairman of the school board was not directly quoted, The Sentinel believes it only fair to state that the chairman of the school board, in saying that it might be necessary to charge tuition, did not express any ill feeling towards the outside districts nor indicate that the tuition was to be charged as retaliation. The Sentinel has made no statement or taken no side in the union high school controversy and believes that it fairly reported what was said by each side, but it does believe that regardless of the action that has been taken concerning the proposed high school, regardless of many harsh things that were said during the discussion of the proposed high school district and regardless of whether or not the city district can legally charge a tuition fee, every possible consideration should be given students from outside districts who wish to attend high school here. Whether or not the city district will in the future be able to care for all who may wish to come, since the union district has failed, will have to be decided when the emergency arrives.)

Use Scientific Methods for Growing Orchids

Because of the rareness and beauty of the orchid several florists in the United States are devoting their efforts to growing orchid plants from seeds. This "aristocrat of the flower kingdom" was formerly imported from the mountainous districts of the tropics, where it grows clinging to trees. Manufactured gas now makes this unnecessary.

The seed of the orchid is almost microscopic in size. Since it is incapable of self-germination, scientific methods are necessary. The seeds are first placed in a glass flask, containing a specially prepared liquid, which furnishes carbon dioxide and moisture. It is necessary to keep the temperature at 90 degrees in the daytime and 70 degrees at night. The plants are grown in flasks for the first year. After that they are transferred to pots from year to year. The plant starts to flower at the age of five or six years.

In the propagating house, where the plants are extremely delicate, they are kept warm by gas. The fact that gas can be controlled easily and efficiently makes it invaluable in orchid culture, as any sudden change in temperature would cause the loss of many years' work.

New Yorker Who Made Lobster Dish Famous

One Ben Wenberg, a beau of his time, and a crony of Charles Delmonico, one of the four members of the family that made Delmonico's famous as the best restaurant in America, was responsible for the first concocting of lobster a la Newberg. Every Sunday at noon Mr. Wenberg would make his coronation entry into the dining room at Delmonico's, and take a seat at a table invariably reserved for him. In one of the pockets of his silk-velvet embroidered waistcoat he always carried a small bottle of the fiery red pepper which lent its peculiar savor to the method he had invented for preparing lobster. The waiters brought him all the rest of the condiments, sauces, wines and the other ingredients, as well as the chafing dish he employed. This concoction was known first as Lobster a la Wenberg, but after a quarrel between the two friends, Mr. Charles Delmonico ordered its name changed on the menu cards to read, Lobster a la Newberg; and since the two were never reconciled, so the name remains.

High Tide at Panama

While it is contrary to the usual idea, there is really no difference in the main level of the Atlantic and the Pacific oceans, yet the difference in the tides at Panama is about 18 feet. This is due to the shape of the Bay of Panama. As the tide sweeps from the Pacific into this bay it meets a funnel-shaped shore line, which gradually contracts as the tide travels landward. The result is that the tide rises higher and higher until it reaches a maximum of 10 feet above the average sea level. When it flows out of the bay it reaches a point 10 feet below the average sea level, thus giving a tidal fluctuation of 20 feet. This same rise of an excessive tide may also be observed at the Bay of Fundy. On the Atlantic at the Zone the tidal fluctuation is only two feet.—Adventure Magazine.

Among Earliest Writings

Runes are the earliest written characters used by the Teutonic races of Europe. They are formed principally of straight lines, and are found in inscriptions on weapons, ornaments, implements and memorial stones in various parts of Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Germany, and to some extent, England. The origin of the runes, as well as the date of their invention, is unknown, but it is believed they were derived from the Latin alphabet and that they were used as early as the Third century. The Norsemen believed Odin, chief of the gods, first scratched them on his spear. These runes were identified with heathen worship. The runes were retained in Scandinavia far longer than in any other region.—Kansas City Star.

Gold From Jewelry Dust

As a piece of jewelry is polished on a rapidly rotating buffer it throws off "dust" that becomes imbedded in the covering of the buffing wheels. These covers are washed from time to time and the gold dust salvaged by the use of acid. The dust surrounding the machines also is chemically treated. This reclaiming process by the various establishments over the country saves many thousands of dollars. One firm alone in a mid-western city is said to save more than $6,000 annually in this way.

Priceless Old Books

The earliest arithmetic published in the New World was printed in the city of Mexico in 1623. No copy of this book, which would be worth a fortune, is known to exist. The second, also published in Mexico, came out in 1649 and was also believed to have vanished completely. Recently, however, a copy has turned up in the Garcia library at the University of Texas, the oldest arithmetic of all that have been published in the New world.

Witch Doctors Honored

In East Africa the witch doctor is an honored personage. He does a thriving and lucrative business in charms, astrological readings and written incantations. The interesting point is that it is admitted that from such witch doctors as thrive there civilization in the past derived priceless information with regard to certain curative drugs and animal and vegetable poisons. Results of the ministrations of these witch doctors demonstrated poisons particularly.

Only Half a Loaf.

A young curate, rushing quickly for his train, was greatly perturbed to see his bishop walking on in front. He tried to hurry past, but all to no purpose.

"No hurry," remarked the bishop. "I'm going on that train, so we'll travel down together." But when they arrived at the station the train had gone, and the bishop, pulling out his watch, said: "I can't understand it. I had great faith in my watch." "Yes, answered the other, "but faith alone is not sufficient; you must have good works."

Prompt Payment of Bills Helps Everybody

You receive your payment of wages promptly on the date agreed, the business and professional firms who supplied your needs during the month all in turn receive their pay promptly. Each tradesman and professional firm then promptly pays the manufacturer and wholesale distributor who in turn promptly pays for the farm products, the lumber products, the raw materials and what not!

Everybody smiles and is cheerful for all have been paid promptly and a great circle of transactions has been completed in a given time. Confidence and faith has been established. The wheels of industry are turning and prosperity becomes the rule. This ideal can be a fact in Cottage Grove by making Cottage Grove a prompt pay community.

The majority of business and professional firms of Cottage Grove and vicinity have agreed on Thirty days as the period for open account credit accommodation. If a longer time than thirty days is needed for a loan, make pre-arrangement with your banker, your dealer or loan agency. All current bills not paid in thirty days are termed "past due." Every member of the Credit Association is required to report all delinquent accounts. Help everybody else to pay promptly by paying this month's bills promptly and in full.
