One Kind of Exercise Not for Modern Boy

In these days of power saws and new ways of heating and cooking, the majority of boys are not getting the fine exercise with the sawhorse and the hucksaw that their fathers used to obtain, says the Salem News.

In the fall, as the old almanac says, it formerly was customary for the old man gently but firmly to steer his son out to the woodpile and suggest that it was needful for him to reduce those powerful looking sticks of four-foot wood to kitchen stove size. It was suggested, more or less delicately, that these youngsters had free board and clothes and spending money, and that the least they could do was to perform the allotted task on that woodpile.

It cannot be said that the boy element took hold of the woodpile with willing zest. However, if the kid over in the next yard had one to reduce also, then the spirit of competition came in. But on many days the old saw would drag terribly. It did seem as if those long sticks were the very invention of the evil one, so gnarled and knotty were they.

However, no kid in those days liked to admit that he was stumped or could not do the things generally expected of a boy. The youngster was thrilled also to hear the old fellows brag of the very short time in which they could saw and split a cord of wood. He was incited to speed up a bit himself and, as the days went by, found himself able to do more and more of a stint.

It was a fine physical exercise and good moral discipline. Boys trained to cut up a woodpile usually made good. They raised industrious families and had a pretty good time through it all.

From the Note Book of a Cynical Widow

In all the world, there are only two kinds of people, and they are very much alike—men and women. The sincere wife means all she says; the stupid one says all she means.

The average marriage—two M-cawbers heavily waiting for something—or somebody—to turn up. When a husband is jealous a wife questions his confidence; when he isn't, she questions his love.

A man regards the frivolities of another man's wife as rather diverting, but the frivolities of his own wife are a nuisance.

If you talk about it enough you can wear out anything—especially love. Divorce has ceased to be a menace; it has become a mannerism. No husband is a hero—to his successor.

No really moral woman ever created a chic hat.—Kansas City Star

Earliest Watches

In 1477, Peter Hele, a clockmaker of Nuremberg, made a clock in the form of an egg, which could be carried in the pocket. This production cost a year's labor, rendered its maker's name immortal, and, in its age, was accounted one of the wonders of the world. And yet it required winding twice a day and varied an hour a day from the correct time.

Hele probably invented the fusee spring, but the hairspring was the invention of Dr. Robert Hooke, an Englishman, in 1658, and Hooke was also the first to use a lever escapement, in 1660. The use of jewels for bearings of the pivots was introduced about 1700, and the compensation balance was invented in 1807.

Unique Church Tower

In the tower of St. Botolph's church, Boston, Lincolnshire, England, are 865 steps, corresponding to the days of the year; the church has 12 pillars, 52 windows, and 7 doors, representing the months, weeks and days in a week. In the porch, at the west end of the church, are 24 steps (ascending to the library above), representing the hours of the day. Again, on each side of the choir there are 60 steps, leading to the roof, denoting on the one side the minutes, and on the other side the seconds of the hour. Whether the four stories in the tower may have been intended to represent the quarters of the year is an open question.

Sport With Dragon Flies

One of the most popular amusements among Japanese boys is the sport of catching dragon flies on long poles smeared with lime. When the insects are captured, they are tied with fine string and flown from the sticks. The dragon fly is known to almost every part of the world except the polar regions, more than twenty-one hundred species being classified. A peculiarity of some kinds is that they choose a favorite twig on which to roost and always return to it even after long excursions after food.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Bring on the Bacon

A school teacher was in the habit of giving out passages from Shakespeare to be written down by her pupils. One day she gave the class this one from Hamlet: "The appetite grows by what it feeds on." One of the boys, a thin little fellow from a poor family, held up his hand. "I've written it down, miss," he said, "but I don't think it's true."

"Don't you? Why not?" "Because my appetite is growing by what it doesn't feed on."

Avoid Gluttony

By eating what is sufficient man is enabled to work; he is hindered from working and becomes heavy, idle, and stupid if he takes too much. As to bodily distempers occasioned by excess, there is no end of them.—Jones.
