THOUGHTS SUGGESTED BY A CAMPING TRIP.

The biggest fish are the ones who believe everything they are told about the big ones that get away.

If men found as little fault with their food at home as they do on an outing, what a joy it would be to women to prepare their meals for them.

It is a wise precautionary measure to take with you sufficient meat for the entire trip.

Buried in the depths of the Oregon forests, man can't help but feel how puny are the works of the world.

A mountain stream of azure blue, lanked by the deep green of fir and cedar is a thing of beauty, the enjoying of which recompenses for all the inconvenience of getting to it.

Any old cook is a good cook when the boarders are men who have spent a day tramping the woods or making their way along rocky mountain streams.

A mountain stream rippling along its way only a few feet from your pillow, a bonfire throwing its glow into the open tent, the starry heavens above showing through the towering gothias of the forest guarding your slumbers—that is the life.

Oregon fish are made of India rubber—not for the purpose of shedding water better, but to allow anglers to give them proper proportions in the stories they tell their friends.

A camping trip offers ample opportunity for getting acquainted with your family and for learning what a daily trial your children are to their mother.

To lose a two-pound Dolly Varden just as you are reaching out to take it off the hook is a keener disappointment than having an expected subscriber take his money to another paper.

A man goes out for a two weeks' rest and does more real hard work than he would do in two months at home.

A woman authority says that folks would live to be 150 if they did not wear so many clothes. Add the desire for longevity to the reasons why present styles are the most sensible the world has ever known.

The bricklayers in an eastern city are planning to strike. They will have to carry signs or something to indicate that they are not working, for few will be able to notice the difference.

The man who runs away with another's wife under the impression that he will be happier, is about to start his education.

A physical giant with dwarfed soul and intellect is a pitiful thing.

Odd.
"Well, darling, what did you see at church today?"
"Oh, muver, I saw de funniest thing—a man that said his prayers and den he didn't go to bed."

Strict Rulings Made for Caveman Wooers

Comes the information from the Field Museum of Natural History in Chicago that cavemen were most considerate in their wooing and gentle to their mates. Wall scratches in one of the caves, when translated, were found to be a complete set of rules of deportment for young bachelors desirous of ending their state of single blessedness. An abstract of the rules follows:

Spikes must be removed from clubs in the mating season. Any man found wallowing his dancet with a spiked club will be haled before the tribunal of women, made to pose for 24 hours as a clothes form and then thrown to the dinosaurs.

Rocks over six inches in diameter will be used under no circumstances.

A clean knockout will be considered more favorably than consent obtained by persistent battering.

Hair pulling must be done in proportion to the length and amount of the hair.

No girl, however coy, is to be held under water for more than two minutes at a time.

Pet saber-tooth tigers, brontosaurus measuring over half a mile square and trick pterodactyls are not to be used to influence nervous or neurotic subjects.

Attempts to ingratiate prospective fathers-in-law by wallowing prospective mothers-in-law will be severely dealt with.

Kicks must be delivered with the side of the foot only.

The proposed benedict will assume full responsibility for any permanent injuries sustained by the object of his affections.

Under penalty of being fed to the megalosaurians, or worse.—Kansas City Star.

Birds Great Travelers

The journeys undertaken by some birds are really marvelous. The tiny goldcrest—the smallest European bird—weighing but a dram, and some other avian Liliputians cross the waters of the North sea on dark November nights, while some species of sandpipers migrate from islands well within the Arctic circle to New Zealand and Cape Horn. These wonderful aerial feats are undertaken by birds barely three months old. The Arctic tern, a common sea swallow, flies almost from pole to pole twice a year.—London Discovery.

Loin Cloths Common to Tropical Dwellers

Practically every primitive tribe dwelling in the tropics that has been studied by scientific observers has been found to wear some form of bodily covering of the loin region either in the form of paints of various colors, tattoo marks, strands of beads of various materials, beaten bark or bark cloth, or of woven girdles or aprons of cotton or other vegetable or animal fibers. The inhabitants of the Nicobar Islands and of Central East Africa are apparently of all tribes the most free from loin coverings of all sorts. Reasons given for the wearing of loin coverings vary. Native modesty is usually present in some form, even apart from any influence that may be attributed to the whites; tribal and ceremonial painting or tattooing is often a causative factor and may supplement a woven girdle worn for entirely different purposes, namely, for the insertion of the hilt of a knife and as a place of attachment for burdens; most primitive peoples are burden carriers. Protection against insect pests is often attempted through the agency of breech cloths. Tradition and native styles usually dictate the use of certain forms of loin covering even to the minutest detail.

Eel Only Fish Which Seeks Prey in Packs

Among fishermen the pike is called "the tiger of the stream" because of its daring and ferocity, and in the havoc it plays among the lesser denizens of the underwater world.

But, as in the jungle, the wolf pack is responsible for more killings than is the solitary tiger, so the depredations of the wolves of the stream, the eels, are ten times greater, although perhaps less visible than the spectacular dashes of the pike, says the London Mail.

Eels are practically omnivorous and will eat anything—fish, flesh, fowl or insects. Nothing from a dainty spinner to a dead dog or cat comes amiss to these ravenous of the stream. They wage relentless war on all other species of fish, devouring their spawn and hunting the small fry from their hiding places under stones and weeds.

Eels are the only species of fish which actually hunt their prey in company. The pike, perch and trout are all predaceous, but in hunting they work singly. But eels, like wolves, although hunting individually where the smaller fry is concerned, do not hesitate to band together and attack victims for which they would be no match in single combat.

Hebrews Among Early Settlers in America

Father Lejeune of Kamloops, a pioneer missionary in British Columbia and probably the foremost linguist of native Indian dialects, has reported to the government of Canada that the words of Hebrew origin are found in most languages of the province. He writes, says Pierre Van Paaseen, in the Atlanta Constitution, that among the Tehlupheans there were such customs as the burnt offering of food and fasting from sunset to sunset in times of stress. The priest has come to the conclusion that Hebrews lived in America as early as between the years 1100 and 1000 A. D. He advises that an exhaustive study should be made "before old men and women of Indian tribes who are today in a position to recount the customs and beliefs of the aboriginal peoples of British Columbia have passed away." And he advances the theory that following establishment of a Jewish community at Kalfeng, China, Chinese expeditions brought Jewish traders to the Pacific coast of North America.

"Lost Continent" Again

Though the myth of the lost continent has long since been thought exploded, a recent article in a Dutch periodical revives the story and adds that after all it may have existed. Scientists also are discussing the possibility that about its proof it once existed and new-found shallows in the Gulf of Gascony start speculations once again. Once the lost continent was a matter of faith, and men took the word of the Egyptian priest who told Solon it was larger than all Libya and Asia, and lay beyond the Pillars of Hercules, near the true sea. It sank, said the Egyptian, after an earthquake that shook its golden cities for a day and a night. "Whereupon that sea is now impassable on account of the alpine mud which has been left."—"P. V. P." in Atlanta Constitution.

Long Sleep for Long Life

How much sleep should a busy man have if he wishes to keep fit and live to a good old age? The question is answered by Dr. A. T. Nankivell, the medical officer of Plymouth, England, who says that eight to ten hours is necessary. He points out that although we crowd into our days three times as much as our grandparents did, we take only the same amount of rest and sleep. The strains of modern life is considerable, says Doctor Nankivell, and a man who has had a strenuous day should rest and sleep his eight to ten hours if he wishes to keep his youth and arterial elasticity.

Matter Easily Settled

Mr. Wombat (who, in the absence of his wife, has called in Sherlock Holmes to consult him)—Mr. Holmes, I wish your invaluable aid in deciding which present I shall get for my wife for her birthday—an electric range, or a full-length mirror. Sherlock (after quick inspection of the kitchen and bedroom)—The mirror will please her best. I observe that the floor in your wife's boudoir shows more evidence of wear than that in the kitchen.

Insects Wait for Weather

Observations made by a British scientist have led to the belief that if the weather is bad the small egg moth can postpone its own birthday for days, months or years. The cocoon of this type is ordinarily due to open in February, but if the weather is inclement the birth is usually postponed some time for twelve months. Moths have been known to emerge successfully after being imprisoned eleven years.

Hadn't Brought Bill

A young woman entered a milliner's shop with a young man and paid a small deposit on a hat, which she promised to call for in a few days. However, it was several weeks later when she returned. The assistant having forgotten the transaction, asked if she had brought her bill. "Oh, no," she replied. "You see, we're married now, and we can't afford train fares for two."

Readiness

ALL over the then-known world the runners and mounted messengers of ancient Assyria bore the decrees and edicts of their rulers. Trained for fleetness and endurance, these message bearers of a vanished empire stood at their posts, stripped for the task, prepared for instant dispatch of whatever was given them to speed to distant points.

The universal message bearer now is the telephone. Its nationwide range has come about through a far-flung system of wires, cables, switchboards and supplementary apparatus. Through the cooperation of a vast army of men and women it daily transmits the thoughts and desires of millions.

It is because of unceasing inspection, watchfulness, coordination and all else that makes for instant readiness that Americans today, anywhere, can talk to one another, any time.
