Force of Habit.

Sad indeed was the plight of the all-around sportsman. It was at a track meet that it all happened, the newspapers claimed. The all-around sportsman was entered in the hundred-yard dash.

He started with the crack of the gun, shadow-boxed and slugged the men in the three next lanes. He turned to the man on the other side and tackled him. He then roared down his own lane like a racing automobile, did a hop, skip and jump, a swan dive to the dirt and swam for fifty feet. He got to his feet again for the final spring, but someone hollered. "The catcher's got the ball." So he slid across the tape.

When the referee told him that he had won he said, "All right coxswain, get one of the managers to dry off the shell and put away the oars, will you?"

Mercy Cut No Figure in Old-Time Justice

The torturing of criminals on "the wheel" is a very ancient form of punishment. In an "improved" form it was revived in Germany in the fourteenth century. The unfortunate victim was laid upon a very large cart wheel, his legs and arms extended and fastened to the spokes, and in that position, as the wheel was turned around, his limbs were broken by successive blows with an iron bar. In France, where the wheel was used only to punish criminals of the most atrocious sort, the victim was first bound to a frame of wood in the form of a St. Andrew's cross—that is, two bars of equal length laid crosswise like an X. Grooves were cut transversely in these bars, above and below the knees and elbows, and the executioner struck the limbs of the victim eight blows so as to break them in these places. Sometimes he finished his work by striking the criminal two or three blows on the chest or stomach, which usually put an end to the sufferer's life, and therefore were called blows of mercy. The punishment of the wheel was abolished in France at the revolution. In Germany it was occasionally inflicted early in the last century for the crimes of treason and parricide.

Bird Sacred to Indians

The ptarmigan, like the Indian, is susceptible to civilizing influence. Since the Indians of the Glacier National park reservation took up agriculture, this mountain-side bird has come down into the valleys, even to mingle with the barnyard chickens and eat of the Indian's wheat.

The ptarmigan turns pure white like a snowshoe rabbit in the winter time, and the Indian has a sacred regard for the feathered creature in this immaculate transformation.

Slightly Altered Meaning

Many are the laughs that come out of jumbled type. An advertisement was meant to read: "Cultured readers will like this book." The printer put the last letter of the first word at the beginning of the second! Try it on your own type-writer.

NEWSPAPER advertising makes big stores out of little ones and keeps them from going back to little ones.

What would you give, Mr. Farmer, to have set before you for inspection and study the very finest and best bred livestock in all America? A year of your life or ten acres of your best land, wouldn't you? The lessons learned would be worth it.

Yet, you can have that opportunity without the sacrifice. At Portland, October 30-November 6, the 16th Annual Pacific International Livestock Exposition will exhibit the largest and greatest assemblage of livestock ever shown under one roof or at one time in the land. Dairy and Beef Cattle, Horses, Hogs, Sheep, Goats, competing for the largest premium list ever published—$100,000. Also you will see the great Fox exhibits. There will be the world-famous Horse Show, too, and a Land, Industrial and Dairy Products Exposition.

The Bank of Cottage Grove deems the Pacific International an opportunity of a lifetime for every farmer in this vicinity, and we say: GO!
