Bird's Color Changed by Feeding Methods

The food a bird eats can modify the colors of the plumage. Canaries, for instance, can be changed from their usual clear pale yellow to a rich orange hue by mixing with their food sweet cayenne and the husks of capicum. Pigeons, too, can be similarly altered. Some years ago the Austrian scientist, Doctor Sauerbren, kept pigeons which he fed upon foods mixed with harmless aniline dyes. By use of one dye he obtained pigeons of a beautiful red, and with another dye he got others of a rich blue. The African touraco has crimson feathers, but its color is not "fast," and if the bird is exposed to heavy rain it fades to a sort of pink. By steeping the quill feathers of the touraco in boiling water a beautiful dye can be obtained. The bird's second color, green, is quite permanent. Some humming birds can only be described as living jewels, but the most varied and brilliant coloring is found in the parrot tribe. The most beautiful British bird is the kingfisher, but as a rule brightly colored birds belong to hot countries.—Montreal Family Herald.

Ponce De Leon Lured by Gold, or Lobsters?

Many historians concede that Columbus discovered the island of Boriquen, as Porto Rico was then called, on November 19, 1493, and that he came ashore next day. With him came Ponce de Leon, destined to write his name with his sword across the map of Florida, and to perish in Cuba from an arrow wound while in the Everglades. Legend states that they were kindly received by the Indians, who deemed the bearded strangers immortal and feasted them on strange fruits and the delicious langostas, or lobsters, which are still found in great profusion in the waters of Aguadilla bay, says the New York Times.

Ponce de Leon, perhaps the most distinguished of the admiral's companions, became very fond of the crustaceans and ate many of them during his stay. Tradition has it, indeed, that his return to Aguadilla from Santo Domingo in 1500, at the head of an exploring expedition, was due more to his love for lobsters than to the lure of gold. The gallant adventurer had not at that time heard of the fabled "Fountain of Youth."

Not long ago fishermen in a nearby river discovered an Indian idol of carved soapstone, depicting a bearded figure, seated, with an enormous lobster twining its claws lovingly about the man's neck. The tail of the crustacean reaches the ground, indicating that the body of the model must have been nearly four feet in length. At once the news spread that an image of Ponce de Leon had been found, and the curio was deposited in the museum of Captain Azua in Bayamon, where it is now on exhibition.

Forgivable

James M. Whistler, the artist, who was noted for his peculiarities, on one occasion was walking about an art store, gazing with eagerness in action at the pictures. Another artist, who knew him slightly, was sitting in the center of the room when a friend approached him and begged an introduction to Whistler. Feeling very proud to be able to grant his friend's request, he rose and approached the American.

"Oh, Mr. Whistler," he said a little nervously, "excuse me, this is my friend, Mr. B."

Whistler halted in his slow march around the room, and then looking back over his shoulder and casting a rapid glance at B, he replied, "Oh, indeed; well, it doesn't matter."

"Stabat Mater"

The "Stabat Mater" is a medieval poem of uncertain authorship, generally ascribed either to Jacopone or to Pope Innocent III. It came into popular use in the Thirteenth century, although not at that time with any musical setting. Because of the beauty of the poem, it became a great favorite with composers, and hence a number of musical settings have been furnished for it, the earliest being that of Josquin des Pres, which appeared in 1519. Other compositions are those of Pergolesi, Haydn, Stefani, Clara, Astorga, Winter, Raimondi, Dvorak, Verdi, Ernest Walker, and Sir C. V. Stanford.—Literary Digest.

Goat's Good Qualities

The goat is one of the most misunderstood animals living in domesticity. From the very dawn of history it has played an important part in the progress of mankind. By the Semetic people, round which our history centers, the goat was highly esteemed. Its meat was food for guests. It is now a lover of men and unlike its relatives of the bovine world, it appreciates the association of humans—especially children—and never wanders off to solitary pastures as do the cows and sheep. It almost equals the dog for fidelity; certainly it is on a par with the cow and sheep in utility.

A Human Quadruped

Jennie Marie, age four, fell into a fish pond but fortunately was rescued without injury. Later, in telling of the incident, she wound up her vivid description by exclaiming gleefully: "And only my hind feet were sticking out of the water."

Look Ahead Wisely

Taking things as they come may avoid some trouble, but shaping things that are coming will avoid loss. To the man who anticipates and exercises his best judgment there is no question that foresight pays better dividends than hindsight.—Grit.

Mrs. Joe Pléard, a neighbor, discovered the fire and turned on an alarm, but the car was a mass of flames before anyone reached the burning building. The car, an Oldsmobile, was partially covered by insurance. The cause of the fire was not known.

From Tent to Ten-Acre Building

That's the tremendous growth of our own Pacific International Livestock Exposition of Portland in 16 years—from an insignificant beginning to the largest and most important combined livestock exposition in America. It is a monument to every farm and farmer in the Northwest—an achievement of which we all may be proud. This year the Exposition takes place October 30-November 6, and reports indicate even a bigger, greater Exposition than ever before—with the finest Dairy and Beef Cattle, Horses, Hogs, Sheep and Goats in all America competing for the largest premium list ever published—$100,000. Combined with it are the world-famous Horse Show, Land and Dairy Products Show, Industrial exhibits and the great Fox exhibits.

The Bank of Cottage Grove believes in and encourages the raising of more and better livestock. Therefore we say go to the Pacific International and profit by what you learn.

The Chrysler Principle

Is to give clear evidence of being beyond comparison—and that evidence is plain and unmistakable in the Chrysler "60"

Chrysler "60" is supplying one of the four great markets into which the total motor car demand is divided.

It was planned by Walter P. Chrysler and his engineers to deserve—by plainly giving greater value—the greater proportion of that market.

Like all Chrysler cars, the "60" was given outstanding qualities unusual in cars of its type and class.

The Chrysler principle is to give clear evidence, by performance and long life, of being beyond comparison—and that evidence is plain and unmistakable in the Chrysler "60".

It is unusual in its class in that its model number, Chrysler "60" means literally sixty miles and more per hour.

That, in turn, is an index of its characteristically sound design and construction—for the Chrysler "60" does not merely deliver 60 miles and more per hour in spurts, but if need be would do so for days, weeks and months.

New elements of power, new elements of speed, new elements of instant and easy obedience to the steering wheel, new elements of smartness, have been brought into the class now led by the Chrysler "60".

These qualities and qualifications are so marked that the Chrysler "60" as a car, and its prices as a medium of value, proclaim themselves untouched and unapproached by any rivalry.

Five body styles, priced from $1075 to $1295.
