Youth Rides West

She nodded slowly, solemnly. "That's good," she said. "Not the part about me—but about you. It is you as I'd like you to be." Then she smiled, almost like her old self in her merry moods. "Can't we forget this morning—for a moment? You've had a dreadful, dreadful night and day! You must sleep now." "Sleep!" I said. "When I have a few hours with you and may not see you for years!" but even as I spoke a rush of inner driveness made insincere my words. Constance looked outside. The tentflaps gaped wide, making visible this rude apartment to all the world. "This camp doubtless thinks about as scandalously of you and me as it can," she said. "Look, Robert—I'm going to make you lie down on my bed."

Had I been myself, I should have protested. As it was, I yielded like a sleepy child. She wet a towel, washed my face. She loosened my collar. Her touch, which normally roused every fiber in me, was now heavenly soothing. She held my shoulders as I stretched out my aching muscles on the white sheet-counterpane; she knelt beside me, holding and patting my hand. Once she looked swiftly out of doors, then bent and kissed my forehead. I raised my other hand to embrace her, but she put it gently back. I was gone. A light shone in my face. I sprang up sitting. Twilight without. Mrs. Barnaby shading an oil lamp with her hand. "Seven o'clock!" said Mrs. Barnaby. "Your boss has been lookin' over the hull camp for you. Says he's wanted at town meetin' and you've got to get out the paper, though why it should get out—"

"Where's Constance — Mrs. Duane?" I asked. "Her? Oh, she took the two o'clock stage to Denver. Didn't she tell she was goin' to?" (To be continued.)

A Sunday school teacher was addressing her class on the subject of kindness to animals, and, calling to mind the cruel custom prevalent among dog fanciers of cutting off certain dogs' tails, thought it a splendid opportunity to point a moral. "Now, which of you little girls can tell me why it is cruel to cut off puppy dogs' tails," she asked. For a moment there was no answer. Then a child put up her hand. "Well, Mabel, can you tell us?" "Yes, teacher," piped the small voice, "because of the text." "Ah!" said the teacher, busily revolving in her mind those texts which might apply to puppy dogs' tails, "and what text, dear?" Back came the text, albeit a little misquoted: "What God hath joined together let no man put asunder."

A prominent film star was being married. "So," said the bridegroom, "we are agreed. On Monday morning at 9 o'clock we visit the registrar. After that we go to the church, and then you are my own dear wife. Have you anything to say about the arrangements?" "Only that the film rights will, of course, belong to me."
