SOCIETY

More than $40 was realized from the benefit card party given Monday night by the Constellation club in the Masonic club rooms. Bridge and five hundred were played during the evening. Mrs. Lasswell of Yoncalla and William Thum held high scores at bridge and Mrs. Charles Hall and William Ostrander scored high at five hundred. During the evening Mrs. Victor Kem and Mrs. Glen Hane, accompanied at the piano by Miss Helen Ostrander, sang a duet and Mrs. Carl Witte played a saxophone solo. Baskets of green foliage, plants and soft shaded lamps added to attractiveness of the rooms. At the close of the evening dainty refreshments were served. More than eighty persons attended the affair. The general committee was composed of Mrs. C. C. Cruson, Mrs. F. E. Dickson and Mrs. J. S. Stewart and they were assisted by Mrs. H. B. Griggs, Mrs. S. L. Godard, Mrs. George Matthews, Mrs. T. C. Wheeler, Mrs. Charles Adams, Mrs. George Jacobsen, Mrs. Earl Hill and Mrs. H. A. Hagen.

Mrs. C. A. Bartell entertained LaComus club Tuesday afternoon with a 1 o'clock luncheon at Hotel Bartell. Additional guests were Mrs. Herbert Lombard, Mrs. Hylah Laffoon, Mrs. Douglas Clark of Drain, Mrs. J. I. Smith and Mrs. K. K. Mills. A representation of the famous Killarney lake formed an attractive centerpiece for the luncheon table. It was edged with a thick carpet of moss among which green snakes sunned themselves. Miniature boats drifted about over its smooth surface. Shamrocks and St. Patrick's place cards were other features. The guests found their places at the table by suggestions of their husbands' occupations. Green and white hats were favors. Following the luncheon a social afternoon was spent in the hotel parlors. Little Shirley Burkholder in a green and white costume passed candies to the guests. The parlors were effectively decorated with greens and St. Patrick's day features.

The Eagles gave a dance and entertainment Tuesday night for members and prospective members. A large number attended. Loren Harvey president of the order, gave the address of welcome, which was followed by a few remarks on how the order was founded and its principles of organization. Mr. Harvey spoke particularly on how the order had cared for its soldier members and their dependent wives, children and mothers during the world war. The hall and reception room were attractively decorated with green and white paper streamers and shamrocks in keeping with the St. Patrick's season. Sandwiches and coffee were served.

The Delphian society was entertained Tuesday evening at the home of Mrs. C. C. Cruson and the club completed its study of Egypt. The following program was given: Resume, Mrs. D. D. Roberts; preparatory discussion, led by Mrs. L. E. Liston; Egyptian temples, Mrs. Schofield Stewart; Changes in Tomb Construction, Mrs. S. L. Godard; The Decline of Egypt, Mrs. C. E. Frost; Architecture and Art, Mrs. C. C. Cruson; Modern Discoveries in Egypt, Mrs. C. E. Umphrey.

Mrs. O. L. Nichols was hostess Tuesday for M. P. G. club. The afternoon was spent with needlework. The hostess presented each guest with a beautiful potted plant. At the tea hour light refreshments were served. English violets were attractive room decorations.

The Bona Tempo club will hold a covered dish supper tonight at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Garoutte at the Bohemia Lumber company's camp. Husbands of the club members will be guests.

Past matrons and past patrons of the Eastern Star will meet Saturday night at Masonic hall to complete plans for the annual past matrons' and past patrons' entertainment to be given March 25.

Mrs. H. A. Miller and Mrs. W. B. Johnston will be hostesses for the Past Matrons club Monday at the home of Mrs. Miller.

Mrs. Joe Smith, Mrs. H. A. Hagen and Mrs. Victor Chambers are hostesses today for Constellation club.

The Good Neighbors club will be entertained Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. D. W. McKinney.

Mrs. O. M. Miller will be hostess Friday evening for the Joker club.

Mrs. L. E. Liston will entertain Tuesday afternoon for the Elmarts club.

Find Ample Proof of Elephants in America

Scientists interested in the prehistoric animals that roamed the North American continent in times too remote to calculate offhand have now and then resurrected from their beds of rock and debris the skeletons of mammoths and mastodons, those strange creatures akin to the elephant. That the elephant species was known to the civilizations of Central America not so many thousands of years ago seems to be proved conclusively by recent excavations made in Panama. A Hyatt Verrill, writing in World's Work, describes the strange sculptures of an ancient people, dug up from the volcanic soil of the little isthmian republic showing the degree of artistic advancement achieved by that vanished race.

Perhaps the most interesting and remarkable find of all, writes Mr. Verrill, was a large sculptured stone figure thoroughly elephantine in form and detail. Hitherto the so-called "elephants" found in prehistoric (and modern) American ceramics and stonework have been generally accepted as conventionalized antbears or tapirs with exaggerated snouts. But in this case it is scarcely possible to account for the creature on this hypothesis. Not only is the body elephantine, but the large leaflike ears could belong to no other known creature, while the hind knees bend forward, a character peculiar to the elephant. It is difficult to believe that any man unfamiliar with the elephant could have conventionalized a tapir or an antbear to the extent of adding broad fan-shaped ears and legs bending forward, while, as a final touch, the creature is represented carrying a load or burden upon its back.

Not Much of a Meal for Real Hungry Man

Uncle Lije Waters was accustomed to seeing good-sized squares of sponge cake or gingerbread on the upper table, and when he had his first plate of ice cream in a city cafe, he looked with some disfavor on the macaroons and small sponge drops which accompanied it. "How do you like it?" asked the niece, who was doing the honors of the city for her uncle. "The ice cream is certainly first rate," said Uncle Lije. "I call it extra good; but when you come to these things, he added, lifting one of the lady fingers and surveying it doubtfully, 'I presume to say they're right enough, what there is of 'em, but there isn't enough of 'em—just nothing but gape and swallow.'"

Craze Followed Hysteria

A classic example of what popular imagination applied to the common spider can be told in Hygeia Magazine. Italy in the Middle Ages was swept by a dancing mania or tarantism. Persons bitten by a spider called the European tarantula suddenly became extremely sensitive to music, dancing in a frenzy of excitement until they sank to the ground, exhausted and almost lifeless. Certain forms of music were considered good for the afflicted and bore the name of trantella. The cause was not a spider's bite, but a hysteria due to the depleted mental and physical condition of the people as a result of the frequent wars and plagues. The same sort of thing was seen in the craze for long-distance dancing in this country a few years after the World war.

Abbey Is Battle Pledge

Battle abbey, near Hastings, England, was built to fulfill a novel pledge made by William the Conqueror just before his victory there on October 14, 1066.

When William was arming for the fight he is said to have inadvertently put on his shirt of mail with the hind side in front. Partly in order to avert the bad omen, he vowed that, if victorious, he would build on the very site of the battle a great abbey.

It was finally dedicated by William Rufus in 1094. At the dissolution of the monasteries under Henry VIII, the buildings were given to Sir Anthony Browne, who added to the abbey's lodge a west wing for the use of his ward, the Princess Elizabeth. The abbey still is in excellent preservation. F. G. Brabant, in "Rambles in Sussex."

Embroidering Long Known

The girl who uses an embroidery needle today is practicing an art that was highly developed in Egypt 3,000 years ago.

The accomplishment was brought from Egypt to Europe, and was also highly developed in early Greece and Rome. The women of medieval days in Europe were excellent at it, and many splendid ornaments were made for churches and monasteries. At the present time the Orient leads in the art, with the work of the Chinese probably being the most elaborate.

Alcohol in the Seas

The ancient seas were huge alcohol wells. The primeval ocean, with its huge masses of sugar-containing seaweed, was a fermentation vat. So says a Berlin scientist, Professor Lindner. These immense alcoholic seas stimulated delicate forms of early life, he explains, and adds that the plants today which produce sugar, later to be converted into alcohol, are marked by their splendid coloration and intricate structure.

Annual Congregational Meeting.

Growth of the Presbyterian church during the year has shown a normal healthy progress, according to report of departments and organizations given at the annual congregational meeting held Wednesday night. The church treasurer reported the church on sound financial basis and the report of the elders showed that the church membership had increased.

B. K. Job was reelected chairman of the board of trustees, Mrs. Charles Adams treasurer of the church and Mrs. G. B. Pitcher secretary. Newly elected deacons are Carl Ellis, Hugh Trunnell, Clarence Chestnut, W. V. McGee and Schofield Stewart. Joe Smith and Charles Beidler are new elders.

The Willamette presbytery will meet here April 5 and 6 and arrangements were made for the installation of Pastor Duncan P. Cameron to be held at this time. This was held up until the presbytery should meet here.

Dr. A. E. Caswell, University of Oregon professor, spoke on the new pension plan of the Presbyterian church.

Ford's Side Libel Suit Given.

(Special to The Sentinel.)
 DETROIT, March 17.—(U.P.)—United States Senator James A. Reed of Missouri, who is defending Henry Ford in a libel suit for a million dollars brought by Aaron Sapiro of Chicago, today laid before the jury Ford's side of the story. Reed stated that this case is not one of the Hebrew race against Henry Ford. Sapiro has no right to collect damages for the Hebrew race and put money in own pocket. Senator Reed told the jury.

Aaron Sapiro, organizer of co-operative marketing associations, claims that his reputation was injured by articles appearing in Ford's publication The Dearborn Independent.
