New Zealander Proud of His Native Land

As soon as you arrive in Auckland, New Zealand, you feel the peculiar character of this most original of dominions; a blisful land where the 1,500,000 British settlers—for the other nationalities form only small and transient groups—are producing and exporting precious raw materials and engaging in sports of every conceivable kind, which they pursue with incredible verve and enthusiasm.

They are also fully convinced of their superiority to the rest of mankind and of the unique privilege they enjoy in living in these islands. They have their reasons down pat. We must not smile at the questionnaire to be filled before disembarking in New Zealand. In it you must promise before the AI mightily to be good, to observe strictly the wise laws of the land, and, finally, to remember that the experience of spending even a brief period of your existence in those islands is something to be proud of for the rest of your life.

On making inquiries I learned that there is a little unemployment—not, to be sure, because there is no work, but because the English inhabitants prefer to leave hard labor to people of other nationalities. The several hundred Italians here all find good employment in building railroads.—Arnaldo Cipolita in La Stampa, Turin (Living Age).

Men Sought Means of Flying Centuries Ago

Flying in motor-driven airplanes had its birth December 17, 1903, on the sand hills near Kitty Hawk, N. C., when Wilbur and Orville Wright achieved the first authenticated flight in heavier-than-air machine, but flying was in the minds of men centuries before that.

The story of man's longing to fly comes down in hundreds of legends mixed with fact, about individuals who flew and those who tried it and died. Probably the original flying legend is the Greek story about Daedalus, who made a pair of wings with which he flew, and his son, Icarus, who took them on one day and came to grief when he got so near the sun that the wax wings melted.

Giovanni Battista Danti, late in 1490, is said to have flown across the Piazza of Perugia, Italy, in what seems to have been an authentic glider. It was about this time that Leonardo da Vinci began to study the possibilities of flight from the scientific angle and made a helicopter of paper, wire and springs that really lifted itself. Following this there were numerous experiments with gliders, some of them successful, but not until 1903 did the motor-driven plane conquer the air.—Milwaukee Journal.

Big Feet Caused Downfall

Difficulty in obtaining a pair of boots large enough for his feet led to the downfall of Rocky Whelan, once notorious bushranger of Tasmania. Rocky worked alone and had a nasty habit of shooting wayfarers in the back. He acquired his wardrobe by the simple process of taking whatever articles of clothing he needed from his victims. But he had very large feet and was unable to get a fit in his usual manner. So he went into a bootmaker's shop to buy a pair. A constable who had seen him in another part of the country spotted him as he entered the shop and followed, effecting a capture just as the outlaw was trying on a pair of boots. Whelan was executed a few days later on the gallows.—Sydney Bulletin.

'Sweat of Your Brow'

This quotation does not appear in the Bible. The nearest thing to it is the following, found in the third chapter of Genesis, nineteenth verse: 'In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it was thou taken.' Yet the great majority of people seem to think that 'Ye shall earn thy bread by the sweat of the brow' is a Biblical saying. How the error got started nobody knows. It may have been suggested by Milton's phrase, 'Let us go forth and resolutely dare with sweat of brow to toll our little day.' At any rate, it has been employed by English writers for 250 years.—Exchange.

Immortal 'Serenade'

Schubert wrote the 'Serenade' to suit the words of a poem by Ludwig Rellstab. A number of Rellstab's poems were originally sent by their author to Beethoven, who declined to do anything with them because of the state of his health, but who recommended that they be turned over to Schubert. This was done after Beethoven's death. In 1828 Schubert wrote a number of fine songs, which were brought out after his death under the title of 'Swan Songs.' 'Serenade' is No. 4 of the Swan Songs, which include six others written to Rellstab's words. Schubert was born January 31, 1797, and died November 19, 1828.

Lucky

A woman with a particularly disagreeable expression had been holding forth to the man sitting next to her at the dinner party. 'Ah,' she said at last, 'my husband has always been lucky. As a child he was thrown by a horse, but wasn't injured; as a youth the ice broke beneath him, but he wasn't drowned; and as a young man he was caught in an avalanche, but escaped uninjured.' 'Yes,' put in the man quietly, 'but strangest of all he has now been married to you for 20 years and is still alive.'—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.
