Fete Day; Dependent on Church Sun Dial

In 1743 a meridian column was set up in the old church of St. Sulpice, Paris, for determining the date on which Easter and other church fetes would fall. The column bears a long vertical mark extending down its center; this mark is prolonged on the floor. Together these two lines determine a vertical plane in space, which, if sufficiently produced, would include the earth's axis and through which the sun would pass at noon as the earth rotated.

In order to make the event visible a small slit was cut through the roof of the church in the same meridian plane. Through it the sunlight penetrated, slanting downward toward the line below, and swept across it at noon. As Easter approached, the sun's altitude in the heavens increased until the spot of sunlight finally crossed the line at the marked point. Since the other fetes followed Easter by an arbitrary lapse of time, the old meridian column, installed by Maurice de Sully, determined them all. —Scientific American.

Character Is Shaped by Means of Thought

Every day we are becoming more like our thoughts. If they are mean and selfish, we cannot prevent ourselves from becoming so. If they are unclean and evil, our character and conduct will inevitably be shaped by them. It is true that as a man "thinketh in his heart, so he is."

As Charles Kingsley says: "Think about yourself; about what you want, what you like, what respect people ought to pay you, and then to you nothing will be pure. You will spoil everything you touch; you will make sin and misery for yourself out of everything which God sends you; you will be as wretched as you choose, on earth or in heaven, either."

And so the other hand, loving thoughts will produce loving acts, and a generous, kindly way of regarding others in our own minds will bring us to a generous, kindly treatment of them in daily life. —Pentecost Herald.

Manners and Breeding

I make a difference between good manners and good breeding; although, in order to vary my expression, I am sometimes forced to confound them. By the first I only understand the art of remembering and applying certain settled forms of behavior. But good breeding is of a much larger extent; for besides an uncommon degree of literature sufficient to qualify a gentleman for reading a play, or a political pamphlet, it takes in a great compass of knowledge; no less than that of fighting, dancing, gaming, making the circle of Italy, riding the great horse, and speaking French, not to mention some other secondary or subaltern accomplishments, which are more easily acquired. —Jonathan Swift.

Post-Facto Postcards

The acme of preparation was attained by a woman whom the Boston Herald tells about. She had gone to a hospital to undergo an operation. Before the surgeon arrived she asked for two postal cards, wrote a short message on each, addressed them both to her husband and asked the nurse to mail the one it was best to mail the next day.

The nurse glanced at the cards and saw that one of them read as follows: "My dear husband: I have had the operation and am doing nicely. Will be home in a week or two." On the other card was written: "My dear husband: I have had the operation and am sorry to tell you that I did not survive."

Cassowary's Vengeance

A cassowary in New Guinea, after a formal magistrate's inquiry, was convicted of murdering two human beings. The criminal had been tethered in a native village as a pet, and, no doubt, had been thoroughly teased. Breaking away, it nursed its grievances in the bush until full grown. Then it came back and made war on the natives. A man named Tauno was killed in his own garden, and his mother, who went to look for him, was also murdered.

Such was the terrorism caused by the cassowary that people in the village were ordered not to go out alone.

H. W. L. and the Telephone

It seems that Henry Wadsworth Longfellow inaugurated the voice-with-a-smile campaign in connection with telephone operators. No better proof can be had than the line in "A Psalm of Life," in which we read, "Tell me not in mournful numbers." And as for waiting for a number, the following is given in "The Courtship of Miles Standish": "Till some questioning voice dissolves the spell of silence." Does it not speak for itself?

Here Is a Bad One

The American goshawk is the fiercest, most destructive and most daring of all the hawks, says Nature Magazine. Because its breeding range is far north and it is fewer in number than the Cooper, the aggregate damage to poultry is less; though grouse and other game birds suffer greatly, mammals and insects are also taken. Because of the coloring, the depredations of the young birds are often laid to the harmless redtail.

Audrey's Opinion

Are always a source of embarrassment to a child so affected and are often the cause of defective vision.

Frank B. was brought to us by his parents. Glasses prescribed by us straightened his eyes and gave him much better vision than he had ever enjoyed.

Our thoroughly accurate examination showed the cause, and we knew how to make and fit the glasses which effectively removed it.
