Objects of Aversion Hard to Understand

Even fruit and flowers have of fended people curiously. The secretary of Francis I used to stop his nostrils with bread if he saw a dish of apples, to prevent an otherwise inevitable bleeding at the nose. A king of Poland had an antipathy both to the smell and sight of this wholesome fruit, and a family of Aquitaine had a hereditary hatred of it. Henry, the composer, could not endure the scent of the rose; neither could Anne of Austria. The mere sight of the rose was too much for Lady Heneage, bedchamber woman of Queen Elizabeth; indeed, Kenneth Digby records that her cheek became blistered when some one laid a white rose upon it as she slept. A violet was a thing of horror to the Princess de Lamballe, while tansy was abominable to an earl of Barrymore, and Seagull grew pale before watercress.

The harmless cat has frequently been an object of aversion. Henry III of France had so great a dislike to cats that he fainted at sight of one, and it was said of another famous soldier of our time, that he could not sit in the same room with a cat.—John o' London's Weekly.

Woman Accorded High Rank in Intelligence

That Anatole France had a high regard for women may be gathered from the conversation which took place between himself and his secretary, Sander Kemner, and which is reported in her book, "Rambles With Anatole France."

"The intelligence of the woman is very high and she is ready to go to all extremes in asserting herself," he says. "More than the man she is aware of the age in which she lives, because she carries it within herself. In our search for the history of the past it is the woman who shows us the way. It is she who makes us foresee the future, it is the woman, heroic, sentimental, romantic, emancipated, independent. She was taken from Adam's breast, near his heart, brought to life by his ardent desire. How could she be anything else but his image? Therefore, the woman's destiny depends on the man."

Shopping in China

Finding one's way in Chinese cities has its difficulties. Capt. Robert Dollar, well-known American steamship man, once set out to visit a wholesale store in Chefoo. He describes his experience as follows:

First we went through a grocery store into a courtyard containing beds of flowers and shrubs; from there we followed a crooked alley three feet wide into another courtyard, then through another three-foot alley into a small open square. Bordering this square was the wholesale establishment we were in search of. There is, however, nothing unusual in finding important stores in such obscure localities in that country.

Pupils Taught Poisoning

Both boys and girls are taught the poison arts in the jungle schools, and at the conclusion of each school it is customary to experiment on some member of the class. At the boys' school the victim usually is some unruly member of the class. At the girls' school, it is some iconoclastic maiden who has dared to voice criticism of the tribal marriage customs. In case a child dies at either school, its parents are not apprised of the fact until after the close of the school, when the fetid doctor breaks a white bowl in front of their hut.

Old-Fashioned Mothers

She looks to the affairs of her household and she cherishes her babies. She sings, and her songs are the joy-hymns of the mother heart; she cuddles her babies as mothers have done since the beginning; and she is proud of her kicking, crowing "latest," though she loves them all alike. She doesn't mind the pitying jeers of the unfortunate class of her sisters who fail to see in the home the divinest temple of peace and happiness that has been ordained by God.—Jackson (Texas) News.

China's Olympic Games

More than 3,000 years ago, China had gladiators who met in a contest somewhat like the modern Olympic games. These gladiators amused and thrilled the crowds not only with fancy juggling, but with real encounters between champions, one defending himself with a scimitar while the challenger tried to plunge a long spear into his body. Their skill would hold the audience breathless. There is an effort on to revive these feats of skill and strength.

Tender Spot

An old bachelor who was very bald, fell in love with a pretty widow, whose late husband's name was Robin.

One evening the bachelor dropped in to have a cup of tea with the widow. After tea was over, she commenced to sing "Robin Adair."

"The bachelor picked up his hat, 'Madame,' he said, 'even if your husband did have hair, it's no fault of mine that I haven't.'"

Showing Off

It was a children's Christmas party and tea having been consumed each child was asked to sing or give a recitation. All went well until it came to Tommy Jones' turn.

"Come along, Tommy, we would like to hear you sing."

"I can't sing, but I'll fight any other kid in the room," was the startling reply.

Success Credited to Exactions of Poverty

Boys who have grown into successful men will, as a rule, say that the greatest asset and blessing they enjoyed were the exactions of poverty, the struggles they had to make through which they kept their appetites in check, in keeping with their earnings; that frugality was necessary because they had to make ends meet, had to pay for their keep and could only have what they were able to buy after contributing to their families or relatives. They will say that the self-denials they made for others were the most valuable lessons on the road to success, and that the practices forced upon them by necessity lasted through their business careers and made success possible. It is hard for the boy who earns a dollar a week to give part of it for his keep—but there is more in it than the mere contributions of the money. The boy is learning—learning everything worth while. Poor is the boy who is denied this part of his education, it matters not how great his money riches.—Macon (Ga.) Telegraph.

Fool Friends Scored by Great Naturalist

Luther Burbank preferred his garden experiments to business ventures, but the activities of his friends succeeded in enrolling him in business relations with various people for more than twenty years. His business ventures not only turned out badly but they took considerable time from his creative work.

"I do not believe any of the men who tried to exploit or subsidize me or my work had base motives," he wrote in the Saturday Evening Post. "On the contrary, most of them were actuated by a desire to increase my usefulness and to widen the scope of my experiments and to broadcast the results over a greater area."

"I would rather have five energetic and competent enemies than one fool friend; now and again my friends have led me astray, and it has cost me a lot of money, a world of trouble and a multitude of worries before I got back on the main track again."

"Hey, Tom, lend us a half dollar."

"How do you get that way—what did you do with the last half dollar I promised you?"—Wesleyan Wasp.

SUMMONS.

In the circuit court of the state of Oregon for Lane county, vs. Edward Doodall and Alice Jane Doodall, his wife, plaintiffs.

vs. Lillie E. Allen, an unmarried person; Byron Crusen and Jane Doe Crusen, his wife; Mrs. Clyde Crusen Shoemaker and Clyde Shoemaker, her husband; Calvin Crusen and Mary Roe Crusen, his wife; Jim Carey and Susie Poe Carey, his wife; also, all other persons or parties unknown claiming any right, title, estate, lien or interest in the real estate described in the complaint herein, defendants.

To: Lillie E. Allen, an unmarried person; Byron Crusen and Jane Doe Crusen, his wife; Mrs. Clyde Crusen Shoemaker and Clyde Shoemaker, her husband; Calvin Crusen and Mary Roe Crusen, his wife; Jim Carey and Susie Poe Carey, his wife; also, all other persons or parties unknown claiming any right, title, estate, lien or interest in the real estate described in the complaint herein, defendants.

You, and each of you are hereby notified and required to appear and answer the complaint filed against you in the above entitled suit within six weeks from the date of the first publication hereof, and if you fail to answer, for want thereof, the plaintiff will apply to the court for a decree ordering and decreeing that the plaintiffs take possession of the premises described in the complaint herein, and that the title to said premises be quieted against the defendants, and each of them; and that all persons claiming by, through or under said defendants, or any, or either of them be forever barred and foreclosed from claiming any right, title or interest in and to said premises, or any part thereof; and for such other relief as to the court may seem equitable and just.

This summons is served upon you by publication thereof by order of the Honorable W. F. Skippin, judge of the above entitled court ordering the publication of this summons and requiring you to appear and answer this summons within six weeks from the date of the first publication thereof, which said date of first publication is March 10th, 1927.

Save Yourself Inconvenience By Anticipating Your Needs in Printing

You are likely to say that you are too busy to check up on your printing once in a while, that you are too busy with business. The printer has the same trouble and, while he will exert every effort to get out immediately the rush order (which could just as well have been ordered several days before), sometimes to do so is a physical impossibility.

Of course it is a favor to the printer to have copy in his hands several days before a job of printing is needed, but it is at the same time good business for the person wanting the printing, for he has given the printer time to get him out a good job and time enough so that it can be delivered before the last sheet of the letter head, statement, or whatever it happens to be, has been used. The printer and the buyer of printing can profitably work together in the manner suggested.
