Franklin Saw Day of Woman in Business

Although desiring a quiet life in his older years, Franklin could not retire. One political office after another sought him out. He tried his best to avert the Revolution, and his examination before the house of commons in February, 1766, marked the zenith of his intellectual powers.

In September, 1776, Franklin was appointed envoy to France and sailed soon afterward. Despite his seventy years, no other American could have accomplished the things he did. His reputation had preceded him to France. Great ladies sought his company; shopkeepers hung his portrait on their walls and the rabble worshiped him. Under Franklin's influence, money was loaned the struggling colonies. He won from France recognition of the United States and then the treaty of alliance. This was his last and most important work.

Biographers maintain that Franklin more than any other great American possessed the woman's viewpoint. Some even maintain that his great successes were achieved because of this quality; that the great French treaty might not have been brought about were it not for the homage paid the first civilized American by the great dames of Paris.

Certain it is that he was the means of starting the first American woman in business, and he was first in a movement that has changed the present-day life of 110,000,000 Americans.

Old Man in Picture Rather Out of Place

A landscape artist sold a picture to a wealthy woman. The latter soon became tired of it, because, she declared, it lacked animation. So she sent for another artist and asked him to paint a man or woman on the road that ran through the middle of the painting.

The artist did so, and when he met the man who had painted the original work, he told him what he had done.

"I had the temerity to alter a landscape of yours the other day," he said. "It was one you sold to Mrs. Jones. She wanted a figure painted in, so I added an old man walking down the road?"

"Road? What road? There's no road in that picture!"

"Why, yes, there is," said the other. "A road runs through the middle of the canvas."

"Why," cried the first artist, indignantly, "that's not a road! That's a river!"

Wife's Faith in Columbus

If it be true that there is a woman in the background of every notable achievement, there seem to be justification in calling Dona Felipe, the wife of Christopher Columbus, that influence in the life of the man who was later to discover the western world. When Columbus talked to her about his exploration enthusiasms, she was sympathetic and his ambitions appear to have found grateful nurture at their fireside. There is a tale of how Dona Isabella, Columbus' mother-in-law, produced an old box containing maps and logs—piously-kept relics of her husband's. It may be that something found in this box prompted in Columbus the conception, later to become a flaming article of faith, of a land beyond the horizon.—New York Times Magazine.

Royal Ear Wiggler

Empress Marie Louise, second wife of Napoleon I, used to shake her ears through some nervous effort, believing the practice would drive away wrinkles and make her beautiful.

"One of the greatest pleasures of the imperial evenings is to watch the empress turn her ears," wrote Mme. d'Abrantes, one of her ladies of honor. This faculty is very extraordinary and I believe she is the only person who possesses it."

Marie Louise often shook her ears to amuse her friends, but Napoleon disliked the practice and it is said he slapped his imperial spouse several times for doing it.

Odd Butterfly

Perhaps one of the most remarkable instances of camouflage is that of the "Green Hairstreak" butterfly. The upper surface of the wings are blackish-brown; the underside an intensely vivid leaf-green.

A butterfly invariably folds the wings close upwards when resting. Consequently the green hairstreak, conspicuous enough among the hedges, has only to alight upon a green leaf for his green undersurface to render him instantly invisible.—Nature Magazine.

Music Is Swinging

The northern races are coming into their own in music. Music has swung into the fields of the less effete races in recent years. With this I associate the increased use of wind instruments, as opposed to strings. These are able to portray the wilderness, the primitive spirit and also the lonely musings of shepherds, the grandeur of the Himalayas. Nobody would think today of describing a mountain in string tone, but a bass oboe solo could do it very impressively.—Perry Granger, in Musical America.

Advantages of Poverty

A man in Philadelphia has paid $100,000 for an oriental rug and will probably spend the rest of his life worrying about cigar ashes.—Detroit News.

Early Marriage Ceremony

The first instance of marriage by ceremony is attributed to King Cecrops of Athens, in the year 1556 B. C., according to an answered question in Liberty.

SPARK IGNITES CLOTHES VEDA MILLER IS BURNED

(Leader, Toledo, Ore.)

Little Veda Miller, 4-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Miller of Siletz, was seriously burned Sunday, April 10, when her clothes were ignited from a spark from a fern fire.

The little girl and several older children were playing near a burned-over fern area when a spark from an exploding stem was flipped a distance of 15 or 20 feet and caught in the girl's clothing. Nine-year-old June Schaffer, a witness, said that the child's clothing burst into flames almost instantly. The little girl ran to her home, 250 feet away. By the the time she reached there all her clothing was burned away except the collar of her dress. Aside from singing her eyebrows and some of her hair, her major burns were between her shoulders and knees, as the flames were drawn behind her as she ran. The little girl is in a serious condition but is doing as well as could be hoped for.

Mrs. Miller was formerly Lena Wheeler of this city.

YOUNGSTERS FEATURED IN ENTERTAINMENT

The Eagle lodge has billed an unusual entertainment for next Thursday evening at the armory. The Moorman orchestra and vaudeville troupe of Drain will give an entertainment, which will be followed by a dance. Members of the company are Mrs. Moorman and four children. A five-year-old trap drummer and an 8-year-old orchestra bell player will give feature acts. The entertainment and dance are to be a baseball benefit.
