Treasures Placed on Altar of Friendship

A Washington man who spent some months in a rooming house in New York brought home a small yarn to a woman who tabbed them down:

"In the house where I put up I was in a room that had just been vacated by an Old Englishman, who had lived in it for years. His income was so small that after settling for his rent and laundry he had 20 cents a day for food."

"Nobody guessed it, because he was so dignified and proper. One day he brought home another old gentleman and they shared the 20 cents between them until the adopted one was taken ill. Illness calls for doctors, so the old Englishman brought to the room a man who came in a car, and when he went away carried some books for which he had paid $4,000."

"When the excited landlady wanted to know why, for goodness sake, he hadn't sold the books before, the old gentleman told her that he would have suffered any personal privation rather than part with his handed-down treasures, but with a sick friend it was different."

"And when you figure it out—that his friend was just a poor old fellow he had picked off a park bench because he had no better home, you can understand how proud I was to inherit his room."—Washington Star.

Rites Severe Strain on Physical Strength

When Hindu pilgrims visit a sacred place they go around the spot by a continuous series of prostrations.

They carry a stone in their hands and when they drop on the ground they stretch their arms out as far as possible and leave the stone on the ground so as to measure their length.

Then they rise, walk the six or seven feet to the stone, and pick it up. Again they prostrate themselves, leave the stone, arise, and so on until they have returned to the starting point.

Many of the circuits are more than three miles in length, and it requires an entire day to make the whole trip.

Each mile usually requires one thousand prostrations, and when a devotee has dropped three thousand times he is so nearly dead that he rolls over in the dirt to the side of the road and rests there until the next day.

Napoleon Rude to Women

Seeing that the emperor was inclined to be talkative (1815, after the return from Elba), I told him that in general women did not like him because he did not bother to be agreeable to them, although they influenced the minds of men far more than he perhaps realized. Napoleon laughed and said: "Do you think the empire ought to fall into the hands of the women? When I compliment them on their appearance or tell them they are not becomingly gowned, what more can I say? I have other things to think about. They have changed beyond recognition since I have been away. Now they all talk politics, whereas before they talked about clothes."—From the Memoirs of Queen Hortense, in Revue des Deux Mondes, Paris. (Translated for the Kansas City Star).

Tame Monkeys Outcasts

After monkeys have lived with human beings for a time they are looked upon as outcasts by their wild relatives. And should one of them escape and return to the forest, as they sometimes do, and try to rejoin its tribe, it is attacked by the others and driven away or put to death.

On several occasions I have seen wild monkeys chasing pets, and once I witnessed an execution. It was a terrible thing, for the monkeys are savage fighters and utterly relentless when excited and angry. I have known them to wait patiently day after day near a village for an opportunity to kill a captive relative.

Hatred, jealousy and suspicion are as highly developed in the monkey family as in the human race.—Della J. Akley in the Saturday Evening Post.

He Is a Fighter

The American badger's habitat varies from pine forests or dry tropical lowlands to the northern plains, wherever there is to be found an abundance of mice, gophers, ground squirrels, prairie dogs or other small mammals. It is a powerful digging machine and can capture any of them at will, says Nature Magazine. Although a member of the weasel family, the badger is not nearly so agile as its relatives so must make up by strength and courage what it lacks in quickness. It is short-legged and squat, so slow-footed that a man may overtake it, but when brought to bay it fights viciously.

Feared to Tell Mother

Mrs. W. E. K. as a child lived in a small western town during a terrible epidemic of smallpox. She was sitting on the curb in front of her home, with the little boy next door, when along came the "pest wagon" and stopped. Two men in long rubber coats and hats jumped out. "I wonder who they are after?" she asked the boy. "They have come for me," he said. She writes: "My young legs carried me away from that place and I hid under an old culvert for hours. It was many weeks before my mother found out what ailed her child—every time the doorbell rang."—Capper's Weekly.
