One Eye Her Oculist Son Could Not Help

The oculist had a joke the other morning. Every now and then he smiled quietly to himself. "You know," he said finally to the woman, "mothers are wonderful people. They always believe there is nobody quite so clever as their own children."

"Now, my mother, for instance, thinks I know everything about eyes. She doesn't confine her boasting to the neighbors, either. She is just as likely as not to walk up to a nearsighted or cross-eyed passenger in the subway and tell him his eyes need attention and that her son is the best oculist in New York. She says that isn't hunting business for me; it's helping people who don't know enough to look after their sight. But the joke is on her."

"Yesterday she met a man who is distinctly and painfully 'wall-eyed.' 'You mustn't let your eyes go like that,' she told him immediately the introductions were made. 'My son can do anything with eyes. Why don't you go to see him?' 'I'm afraid he can't do anything with this eye, madam,' answered the object of her solicitude; 'you see, it's a glass one.'"—New York Sun.

Witty Professor Gave Nickname to Students

Law students of the freshman class in the University of Texas are designated as J. A.'s. The term is used by all students on the campus, but few of them outside the law school know its import and origin.

When Judge W. S. Simkins was a member of the law faculty, he was explaining one day to a large freshman class some of the weightier matters of the law. It was springtime and the students apparently were thinking more of napping on the grass in some shady nook than of what the professor was saying. Suddenly upon the clear air there came the discord of a donkey's bray. Simkins paused in his lecture while the students giggled over the animal's "hee-hawing."

When the noise had subsided, Simkins remarked: "Some poor jackass is calling his long-lost brother, so I'll let all of you out to go comfort him." Since then, every fledgling lawyer in the school has been designated as a J. A.—Kansas City Star.

Mandy Speaks

When Ol' Mandy, rated as a treasure by the white folks she washes for, first came to the neighborhood she let fall the remark that "if folks hasn't got eddication dey jes' got to use dey brains."

So anybody might have known she would have her own views on this business of Christmas presents. The other day, when the holiday demands of the fine fat and shining little pickaninnies loomed up mountain high, how do you suppose she settled them? Simply informed the five that Santa Claus was dead! "He daid, do you heay?" says Mandy. "and what's mo' he ain't goin' to come to life again, nuther!" How many other heads of families would have followed her example if they dared?—Philadelphia Record.

Scott's Best Novel

Which is Scott's best novel? This question was once discussed by Sir William Fraser and Bulwer-Lytton. They agreed each to write his choice on a separate slip of paper and compare. Sir William announced that he knew in advance they would agree. They both wrote "The Bride of Lammermoor." Mark Twain hated the novels of Scott. He regarded him as one of the world's worst writers. Then some one persuaded him to read "Quentin Durward," and he was so captivated that he declared Scott could not have written it.—William Lyon Phelps in Scribner's Magazine.

Frost and Humidity

The weather bureau says that the occurrence of frost is determined by temperature and humidity. If the temperature of an object falls below the dewpoint for saturation temperature of the air, dew will gather on it if its temperature is above the freezing point, or frost if its temperature is below the freezing point. However, exposed objects are not likely to cool below the dewpoint when the sky is clouded. Hence frost seldom occurs on cloudy nights, and never in great amount.

Play or Get Off Stage

Shakespeare says, "All the world's a stage and men and women are but actors on it." But he failed to say there's an understudy ready and waiting to take the conceit out of most of us. Let us play our parts well!—Grit.
