First Ad in 1695 Got Results

(Multnomah Press.)

The first advertisement ever to appear in a periodical is said to have been published in London in 1695. If advertising did not pay and had not been of value that first ad might have been the last. It was in the nature of a wanted or classified ad, asking for a reliable ship's clerk.

No doubt the ad was answered and the shipmaster got whom he wanted. Since then the growth of advertising has been marvelous. It has made possible the enormous sales due to mass production. In fact it has been a contributing force in making mass production possible and consequent low prices a reality.

Since 1695, a mere matter of 232 years, commerce on land and sea has flourished more than in any three centuries previously. Advertising can not and does not claim all of the credit for this, but it has been a mighty factor in opening the door to world-wide opportunity. It has stimulated local businesses which have made up the vital units in national growth and stability. It has made possible from a financial standpoint the great press of the world, thus extending knowledge and strengthening human relationships as no other institution of communication ever has done or ever can do.

The possibility of a union revival service to be held the first two weeks in January was discussed. No outside evangelist would be secured, the ministers of the city to conduct the services.

Brotherhood

The feeling that formerly told us we alone have special cure bestowed upon us gives place to the knowledge that every one, in his day and generation, wherever found, receives the truth best fitting for his elevation for that state to the next higher; and so "like blade of grass keeps its own fruit after its kind."—André Carnegie, in "Round the World."
