EDUCATION AND WORK.

State Superintendent C. A. Howard has some positive ideas on what education is for, what should be done with it and what the child should do to get it and use it. In his address before the recent session of Lane county teachers he gave expression to his ideas.

Four educational fundamentals were listed by Mr. Howard, intellectual honesty, health of mind and body, a striving for insight and exhilaration in intellectual experience and work.

It is the last point that interests us. "Why be educated," some will ask, "if it still will be necessary to work?" One reason advanced by many to induce children to seek education is that education makes earning a living easier. Some even go so far as to say that hard work is not for the educated.

But here is our state superintendent saying, "Much of the value of an education is lost if the pupil is not taught how to work and be thereby enabled to prove a success in life either through his mind or his hands."

Evidently the state superintendent does not believe that those who loaf their way through high school and college, many as an excuse to keep out of work, are going to leave school prepared to fight any battles with a cold, cruel world. The student who doesn't apply himself during his school years isn't going to be able to do much better in after years.

The state superintendent gave some good advice, even though he was giving it to those who had completed their education. He was giving it to those in a position to see that students are taught to work.

This idea that education does away with need for work is bunk, always has been bunk, and always will be bunk.

Education in many instances does away with the need to perform manual labor for a living, although we find many with meager school educations holding down soft jobs and many with college educations and calloused hands, but education does not go away with the need for hard work, nor should it.

Those who make the most of their learning are ambitious men and women who often keep their noses to the grindstone hours after the laborer has laid aside his pick and his shovel.

If it is short hours we want, it is not education we want but a trade. If we are without ambition and wish merely a good living and plenty of leisure time, we might better spend in learning a trade the time that others spend in getting an education that means the opportunity for long hours and hard work for the ambitious ones.

As a matter of fact, those who have been educated by the state have no business loafing on the job afterward. They have no business being satisfied with a position that provides merely a good living and plenty of leisure.

Those who have been educated by the state owe it to the state to pay interest on the amount the state has invested in them, that interest to be paid by producing something beyond that which they themselves use or consume, by doing something for others, by producing something that will live after them and make it easier for those that are to follow. Those who accept education at the expense of the state are morally bound to repay the state by making the most of that education, by doing things which come only through the hard work of which our state superintendent spoke.

THE POOR LITTLE FLAPPER.

The way of the flapper is certainly a difficult one. She has become accustomed to the criticism of those old-fashioned people who believe that the skirt and the little that goes with it have gone far enough, but now comes the president of the Illinois Association of Chiropractors, who says that the circular garter is a prolific source of varicose veins and that the girl or woman who would have legs that will attract the attention they are intended to attract must eschew anything that binds around the limb tight enough to hold up the stocking.

The flapper has disdainfully and flauntingly disregarded all advice given by the male of the species (who hoped that she would disregard it) and by the old-fashioned ones of her own sex, who would have disregarded the same advice had they been young 60 years later than they were, but no flapper is going to do that which would make her limbs ugly and misshapen. If she had only to suffer excruciating agony, such as some of them do with their six-inch heels, or if the physical defect developed where it would not be noticeable, she would grin and bear it, but nothing is more on show these days than limbs, and nothing must be done to mar their beauty or detract from their shapeliness.

Therefore we may well expect circular garters and tightly rolled stockings to be appropriately consigned to limbo. But the critics will win no point, the flapper will yield by simply doing away with socks altogether.

"Who is a road hog?" asks a puzzled editor. Well, off-hand, we

Using the rule of measurement set down above by Editor Frank Jenkins, and after having travelled behind Jenkins on a trip to Cottage Grove from Eugene when there was a good feed for both of us at this end, we can say that Frank is removed from the road hog class by between 33 and 35 miles.

It seems as if the weather man hits it oftener when he predicts rain than when he predicts fair weather. Maybe that's the reason he predicts rain so often—there's not so much chance of being mistaken and not so much criticism should he make a mistake.

Government statistics show that despite greatly increased population the money in circulation per capita is now about $30 as compared with $5 per capita in 1890. As far as our individual wealth is concerned, it might as well be some time before 1890 right now.

If some girls never married, the world would be better off—and if we were selected to pick out those who shouldn't marry we would pick them more because of the men they would marry than because of any shortcomings of their own.

I seldom hear women express sympathy for a sister who has become involved in scandal.

MOST FATHERS AND MOTHERS.

Mother arises in the morning, gets breakfast for father and the children, gets the children off to school and father off to work. Father spends the day earning money. Mother spends it sewing, mending, washing, ironing, preparing a hot lunch for the children, seeing that they are clean as they go back to school, supervising their play and study after school, correcting what she considers injurious habits, checking up on bad grammar and bad manners, getting and serving dinner.

When father comes home, he plays his part in the family life. He consults with the children about school problems, lays down the law with authority on points where mother thinks she has not been sufficiently impressive, and adds the weight of his words in seeing that next day's school work is prepared, and finally in getting the reluctant youngsters to go to bed.

At last a few minutes of peace. Mother picks up the evening paper and reads: "The home is the weakest spot in America's social fabric today," Dr. W. A. Tretten, professor psychology in an Ohio university, declared. "Its influence should be greater than it is. We should be forced to work out our domestic problems instead of sidestepping them."

It puzzles mother. She doesn't quite see what more she could have done. She reads the item to father. He is equally in the dark. At least most of them.—Medford Mail-Tribune.

Eagles to Go to Eugene.

Officers of the local Eagles lodge and a group of members and candidates will go to Eugene Tuesday night for a joint meeting with the lodge there. A Southern Pacific stage has been chartered and will leave 1. O. O. F. hall at 7 o'clock. About 30 will go by stage and a number in private cars. Grand Worthy President L. V. Westernman will be present at the meeting.

Dallas Councilmen Visit Here.

C. B. Sundberg and A. B. Starbuck, members of the city council of Dallas, were visitors here today. Their city is contemplating taking over the water system there and the councilmen are members of a special committee sent here to investigate the operation of the Cottage Grove municipal water system.

Dental Association Plans Meeting.

The Southern Dental association, with membership in Lane, Lincoln, Benton and Linn counties, has completed details of the program for the first fall meeting and clinic, which is to be held Saturday evening, October 15, at the Eugene hotel. Dr. H. W. Titus, formerly of this city, will present the clinic.

Field Day Postponed.

The field day meet planned by the Presbyterian Sunday school for Saturday afternoon on Delbert Kelly field was postponed because of rain. The downpour made the field too soggy. A new date has not been set.

In proportion to population, Seattle has over three times as many telephones as The Hague, Holland, the capital city of Queen Wilhelmina's realm.

Judges' Latitude to Parish for Contempt

Contempt of court does not merely mean that you treat the court itself or the dispensers of justice in a sneering or contemptuous manner.

A laugh except at the judge's time-worn jests, will bring the severe rebuke, "If you are not careful, sir, I will commit you for contempt of court." You also offend by publicly disputing the learning or authority of the judge or by ostentatiously reading a newspaper in his presence.

To avoid contempt and to obtain a hearing, an English lawyer will not only appear in court in a horsehair wig, gown, and bands; he must also wear a suit of a sober color, black for preference. In chambers, however, a judge cannot summarily commit a person for contempt; and it is not essential for counsel to appear in robes, as in court.

The late Sir James Pacon, while sitting in court, would never listen to a counsel wearing a white waistcoat, despite the fact he himself habitually wore one while sitting as a vacation judge.

It is possible to commit contempt out of court as well as in it. To obstruct a witness on his way to give evidence, to threaten him if he does give evidence, or to destroy any letter or document after the issue of the writ are serious forms of contempt. It is not, however, contempt merely to tear up a writ or subpoena in the presence of an officer of the court.

At the present time the penalty for most contempts is costs. To purge his contempt, the guilty party has usually to pay all the costs of a motion to commit and attach.—London Tit-Bits.

Proof That Colossal Beasts Roamed Mexico

Much interest was created a short time ago by the news of the discovery of the remains of monstrous animals in the state of Sonora in Mexico. These remains have since been examined. One was the tooth of an alosaurus, an animal in some respects like a crocodile, but of colossal size. This tooth, of which only the top is complete, is 12 inches long and 4 inches wide, and in its incomplete state it weighs over 6 pounds. It belonged to a creature 10 feet high.

Another tooth was 12 inches long. According to calculations by veterinary surgeons and dentists the complete set of teeth belonging to one of these huge beasts must have weighed nearly a quarter of a ton. Its head could not have been less in size than a good-sized motor car, and the total weight of this monster must have been scores of tons.

Important

The parents of Ethel had ideas on the rearing of their child, and insisted on trying to carry them out.

One evening, just after tea, Ethel ran into the dining room, her little face ablaze with excitement. Father sat reading his newspaper, while mother was mending the stockings. "Oh, mummy," burst out Ethel. "May I say something?"

"No, Ethel," said mother, firmly. "You know it is against the rules to talk when daddy is reading. You must wait till he has finished." To make the lesson more effective, father went on for some time. Then he laid down the paper, and asked: "Now, dear, what is it you wanted to say?"

"It doesn't matter much now," said Ethel coldly. "I only wanted to say that I couldn't turn off the bathtub, and all the water's running down the stairs."

"Shakespeare" Apt Name

The name of Shakespeare was first borne by a tall man who was attached to the royal bodyguard and who was present during one of the battles and saw an assassin stealing up to a royal person, either king or next heir (I cannot remember which). He snatched a spear from an armor-bearer and ran him through, just in time to save the victim intended. For this he was sent for and knighted on the field and given a spear and commanded to walk before royalty on public occasions for three generations and to receive a grant of five yards of scarlet cloth annually. After this a settlement of an estate a day's journey from London was given and kept for many years, and the owner had to appear at court and wave or shake a spear to prevent anyone coming too near to do harm to the king.—Hector Bolitho, in the Bookman.

Eclipse

A certain Welshman was the proud possessor of a very fine bass voice. Meeting a friend one day he confided that he had had a remarkable dream.

"Dreamt I was in a mighty choir," he explained. "Oh, but it was splendid! There was such a choir as you've never seen. Five thousand sopranos, 5,000 altos, 5,000 tenors—all singing at once double forte. Oh, magnificent!"

His friend gasped in amazement. "But suddenly," continued the singer, "the conductor stopped the lot and, turning to me, he said: 'Not quite so loud in the bass, John Jones!'"

Degrees of Latitude

Points on the same meridians of longitude are farther apart at the equator than at any point north or south. This can be readily seen by consulting a globe, for the meridians converge upon the North and South poles, the distance between them at these points being zero. This has been proved by actual measurement of degrees. It is found that the length of a degree of latitude is greatest at the equator, decreasing gradually toward the North and South poles.
