Napoleon Happy When Hailed as Liberator

One evening, after dinner, the question assumed a personal aspect. An inquisitive member of his circle has asked when he was happiest, and all present give their ideas. Napoleon tells them that he was made content by his marriage, and when his son was born, "I cannot say happy, but content."
"When you were first consul?"
"I was not yet sure of myself."
"At the coronation?"
"In Tilsit, I think. By that time I had learned the vicissitudes of fortune; Preussisch-Eylau had been a warning to me, and nevertheless I had won a victory there; I had dictated the terms of peace, the czar and the king of Prussia were paying court to me. But no, I am wrong that was not the best. "The happiest days I ever knew were after my first victories in Italy, when the masses surrounded me, shouting: 'Viva il liberatore!' I was only twenty-six, but I foresaw what I might become. It was as if I were being lifted up into the air, and the world were disappearing beneath my feet!"—From Emil Ludwig's "Napoleon."

Settled All Chance of Getting Customer

A young man of Indianapolis, in his early twenties, suffered a fell blow to his pride recently when he answered the doorbell at his home to find a young man making his way in the world by taking magazine subscriptions. The young salesman's unprepossessing appearance heralded his age as approximately sixteen or seventeen years and his faltering approach indicated no great amount of experience in the commercial world.
Smiling brightly, he ventured: "Is your mother at home?"
"No."
"Is she taking any of them magazines?" naming a few familiar names of magazines.
"I really don't know, but I don't think she is in the market for any more."
With a weary "Thank you," he started away, when a new hope lit up his face and he played his last card:
"Y-y-you wouldn't care to take the Youth's Companion?"—Indianapolis News.

Jury Wanted Beer, Got it

Soon after his appointment as medical director of an asylum, Sir James Critchton-Brown, the British physician, had to attend an inquest on a patient who had died of heart disease. The evidence was heard, he relates in his book of reminiscences, and the coroner, turning to the jury, composed mostly of laborers, said:
"Now, gentlemen, are you agreed on your verdict?"
The jurors talked among themselves for a few moments and then the foreman spoke up:
"We find as how the deceased died from natural causes, but," he went on, "the jury wish to add that as this is the first occasion on which they have met the new medical director, they hope as how he will stand the jury some beer."
With the coroner's sanction he did.

Sleep

Now, blessing light on him that first invented this same sleep; it covers a man all over, thoughts and all, like a cloak; it is meat for the hungry, drink for the thirsty, heat for the cold, and cold for the hot. It is all current coin that purchases all the pleasures of the world cheap; and the balance that sets the king and the shepherd, the fool and the wise man, even. There is only one thing which somebody once put into my head, that I dislike in sleep; it is that it resembles death; there is very little difference between a man in his first sleep and a man in his last sleep.—Cervantes.

African Treasure Sought

The Africander still believes in the "cave of gleaming gold" that was described by an excited Kaffir in the Krugersdorp; and in the Orange river country a Boer family has sought for years for a parcel of diamonds handed hastily to one of their ancestors by an Englishman flying from pursuing justice, and supposed to have been secreted in an ant-heap in the dusk. The Boer, finding the packet containing many big stones, and fearing the mounted police, hid it and forgot the place.

Vain Search for Treasure

An Australian miner spent part of his life in the bush trying to re-find a mine his partner found and died in describing. But he never succeeded, and, eventually, the bushmen stumbled on his skeleton. A party of French scientists narrowly escaped death from thirst in the Sahara seeking traces of a lost caravan of precious stones that never reached Timbuctoo, and was supposed to have been overwhelmed by a sandstorm, lost its tracks, and missed the wells.

When Trees Grow

Many believe that trees grow from early spring when the leaves begin to come out until the frost when they start to show their autumn color. But this widespread belief is not correct, says the American Tree association. For instance, in the latitude of southern Pennsylvania the native forest trees make 90 per cent of their height growth in 40 days of spring and early summer.

Peculiar Plant Diseases

Mosaic diseases which affect plants are so called because the leaves of the plant attacked by them lose their green color in small angular patches, giving the remaining tissue a pattern which resembles a mosaic pavement.

Movie Czar Says Hays Film Ban Only Myth

Business Reasons Largely Responsible for Rejection Film Offerings.

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—(U.P.)—A more or less prevalent idea that Will H. Hays spends most of his days and all of his nights reading movie manuscripts to decide what shall be seen by the public and what shall not be seen, was shattered today by Hays himself in an interview with the United Press.

As president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., Hays is advisor to 27 important producing and distributing companies and as such he has a great deal to say about the general conduct of the business. Much has been written and said about the "Hays ban" on certain plays and stories and the "Hays ban" on production.

A United Press reporter, who sought to find the "Hays ban," found that it doesn't exist.
"The misrepresentation by those whose plays or books are not being filmed that I 'ban' certain books and plays from motion pictures is entirely in error," Hays said. "It arises from a fundamental misunderstanding of the industry's purposes and a gross misconception of its procedure in this regard."

"This office does not ban anything—any more than an editor bans news from his newspaper. Every editor who is about his business, however, retains the right of final judgment. Reasonable utterances, libelous statements, gross exaggerations, of course, are refused space. They go into the waste basket, where they belong, or are blue penciled out of existence without any thought by the editor, or by anybody else, that the sacred right of free speech is being trampled under foot. The material, so far as the editor and his public are concerned, is just not suitable for publication."

"What happens in the motion picture industry is analogous. The scenario department of a member company is offered the screen rights to a book or play which the scenario editor believes has objectionable or questionable subject matter. He believes that for the good of the industry as well as for the good of his own company, the book or play should not be converted into a moving picture whose audience differs largely from the audience of the book or the play in that its appeal is wider. Acting on the scenario editor's advice, the member company rejects the story and sends notice of such rejection to our association. Such a notice is a recommendation that all the associated companies reject it."

"We, in turn, read the book or see the play with open minds and then if our opinion coincides with that of the company bringing the story to our attention, we forward that company's rejection to the other members so that they, having their attention called to the particular matter, may also avoid a mistake. The companies are not told that they cannot make the picture."

"Meyer," said the film agent, "I gotta good one to offer you—Puppets."

"Naw," replied the theatre owner, "people are gettin' tired of them dog-hero pictures."—Brown Jug.

This Egg Too Old For Table Use

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 13.—(U.P.)—Speaking of eggs, here's an old one—older than the ice age.

It is the only known existing specimen of a giant ostrich egg 150,000 years old. It is technically known as the struthiolitus, which was quite common in north China in the late pliocene and early pleistocene ages.

C. A. E. Carr's hobby is collecting fossil specimens and he brought this one back from China on a recent business trip.

Particles of these specimens have been found before, but Carr's specimen is the only one intact known to science.

"It is surprising that it has come down to the present time in such a wonderful state of preservation," Carr said. "It can only be concluded that previous to its discovery it was surrounded by a protective covering of some sort which time gradually disposed of."

Camel

Climbing to new heights of popularity

Government figures show that more Camels are being smoked today than ever before. One after another Camels passed them all.

If all cigarettes were as good as Camel you wouldn't hear anything about special treatments to make cigarettes good for the throat. Nothing takes the place of choice tobaccos.
