GEORGE'S TABLE MANNERS.

Our immortal George, who was the foremost statesman, soldier, patriot, and citizen of his time, ate peas with his knife and drank his tea out of a saucer.

It is unthinkable that the father of his country who, so his detractors say, was not only first in war, peace and the hearts of his countrymen, but also in kindly courtesy to the belles of his day, should have set the terrible example of propelling pens to his mouth with a knife and of transferring tea into his facial aperture by means of a saucer.

Some may find fault with the hypercritical Hugh for saying that immortal George "drunk" his tea out of a saucer.

One who would cheerfully and joyfully flay others for philological error should be himself ready to stand up to the rack and have the screws applied, and no doubt the Arlington Bulletin, or the Oregonian, or some of those that haughty Hugh has flayed will attempt to make opportunity of this use of "drunk" to even old scores.

But we predict that Hugh will win the battle of philological and grammatical spears and javelins, for "drunk" was commonly used in George's time in the manner in which it has been used by Hugh.

A COWARDLY POLICY.

The Oregon Journal is running a daily serial of criticism of the action of our government in Nicaragua, where Uncle Sam, after an agreement with the opposing factions that he should do so, and in pursuance of the Monroe doctrine, has placed a thousand or two marines there for police purposes.

While we can't bring ourselves to believe that war is something to be desired, yet we much prefer war to the vacillating, cowardly policy which the Journal would have us adopt.

Of course the Journal is taking the position that it does merely because a republican administration is in power and because it is irrevocably against anything and everything done by a republican administration. It has been said that the Journal refuses to have its advertising accounts paid in any money except that printed or minted during the Wilson administration.

Be that as it may, the United States is taking the same position in Nicaragua that the police department of Portland takes in the city of Portland. What the Journal makes itself advocate is that the Portland police department, after promising to protect the citizens of Portland, and citizens of other cities who may unfortunately be there, should it receive warning that a murder was about to be committed, should order all its employees to report immediately at central station and remain there until the murderers had made their escape and left the streets of the city safe for policemen.

The Journal isn't satisfied with its policy, but it has to try to make itself believe that it is.

It has been discovered that in Seattle bathing suits worn by women must reach to the knees and in Portland they must also cover the chest. A woman wearing such an outfit as a street dress would be asked whether she feared catching cold.

The Rainier News, publication of which was started as the result of a municipal recall campaign, has been suspended by its creditors. A newspaper started to take sides in a squabble is bound to be short lived.

A woman in London killed herself by tripping on her long skirt. Over here a woman would cripple herself for life trying to trip herself on her skirt.

A man should never be considered qualified for the diplomatic service until he has been married several years.

The consumer doesn't agree with the producer about prices having been forced down.
