Flute Players II or Popular as Neighbors

Flute playing appears to have gone out of fashion and it has been suggested that this is because of the domination of the instrument in the hands of the few. Violinists and pianists sometimes figure in fiction as heroes and heroines, but performers upon the flute are generally introduced into novels only as comic or unpleasant characters, says the Philadelphia Inquirer.

At least three comic characters of Dickens were flute players: Dick Swiveller, who took it as a "good, sound, dismal occupation," and was consequently requested to remove himself to another lodging; Mr. Mell, the schoolmaster, who "made the most dismal sounds I ever heard produced by any means, natural or artificial," and the young gentleman at Mrs. Todgers' musical party who "blew his melancholy into the flute."

Bulwer-Lytton wrote of a clever schoolboy who "unluckily took to the flute and unfitted himself for the present century," and Charlotte Bronte represents "inept curators" as performing upon it. Then there was also Goethe, who summed up the case against the flute thus: "There is scarcely a more melancholy suffering to be undergone than what is forced upon us by the neighborhood of an inept player on the flute."

Age-Old Difference Over Welsh Emblem

The custom of wearing the leek by Welshmen on St. David's day has been variously accounted for. In the "Festa Anglo-Romana" we are told that it is worn in memory of a great victory obtained by the ancient Britons, who lived in the Welsh region, over the Saxons. They, during the battle, having leeks in their hats for their military colors and distinction of themselves.

Other accounts say that when fighting under their King Caswallon on a field near Hethfield (or Hatfield Chase) in 633 A. D. in which that vegetable was growing they won another victory, and in jubilation they uprooted the leeks stuck them in their hats and then returned home.

The custom has certainly remained since that date, as can be seen at any international sporting gathering with which Wales is concerned. The daffodil is largely superseding the leek in favor as the Welsh emblem.

The Button in History

The button is a product of modern civilization, since the ancient people did not have any such form of holding their clothes together. They were first used for ornamental purposes. The next step was the use of button and loop, the buttonhole being last in the development. Buttons were first employed in southern Europe in the Thirteenth and Fourteenth centuries. Their manufacture in England did not commence until the reign of Elizabeth. The earliest mention of the buttonhole in literature occurs in the year 1501. While men's outer garments are still made with buttons and buttonholes, the trend of the present is away from such fastenings. Almost all women's clothes and many men's undergarments are now made without buttons.

Changing a Mule's Mind

Gen. William Booth, founder of the Salvation Army, used to tell a story of a man in South Africa who was exceedingly successful in dealing with mule teams. Asked how he managed these stubborn creatures, he said:

"Well, when they stop and won't go on I just pick up a handful of gravel or soil, put it to their mouths and let them taste it. Of course they spit it out again; but as a rule they begin to go on."

"Why do you think it has that effect on them?" persisted his questioner.
"Well, I don't know," was the reply, "but I expect it changes the current of their thoughts!"

Kept the Minutes

The village football club was being reorganized. The vicar was appointed president and a person of particularly vacuous countenance was proposed as secretary. "You know how to take the minutes, of course, James?" asked the parson.
The secretary grinned.
"Yes, I know," he replied.
At the next meeting the president announced that the secretary would read the minutes of the previous meeting. The secretary produced his notebook and stood up. "The meeting lasted 25 minutes," he said, brightly.—London Tit-Bits

Fly's Many Eyes

The greater part of the head of a fly is occupied by the eyes, some several thousand in number, described as compound. Between the compound eyes and near the top of the head is a triangular arrangement of three simple eyes. The upper two are much farther apart in the female than in the male. In spite of the arrangement of the eyes and the great mobility of the head, it is not believed that the vision of flies is especially acute, although the range of vision is wide.

PREACHER DESCRIBES UNPARDONABLE SIN

Pastor Edwin O. Colbeck spoke to a large congregation at the Sunday evening service of the Baptist church on "The Unpardonable Sin." He dealt with the historical situation as recorded in the new testament and mentioned the fact that Mark alone gave the definition of the sin: "Because they said Jesus had an unclean spirit," or in the language of John's gospel, that Jesus was a devil.

He said: "If we take Jesus seriously and do not consider him an ignoramus, we shall have to forget the sermons preached by our pet evangelists who tell us it was unbelief, procrastination, rejection of the gospel, loss of our baptism or numerous other traditional ideas."

"Why not listen to Jesus?" He never said it was any of these popular interpretations but defined it as a malicious attitude that expressed itself in the statement that he had an unclean spirit, a devil. Several illustrations from the gospel of John were given by the pastor to show how the sin worked out in terms of life. The Jews on many occasions openly called Jesus a devil.

Pastor Colbeck concluded: "There are many souls living blasted lives because some person lied to them about this sin. If you have not taken the attitude that Jesus was a devil, you have not committed the unpardonable sin."

Aero Club Elects Officers.

The Cottage Grove Aero club at its Monday night meeting elected the following officers: Dr. A. C. Jewell, president; Fred Jacobs, vice president; Elliott Vincent, secretary; Herbert Cochran, assistant secretary; K. DeVore, treasurer, and K. Ward, sergeant-at-arms.

An introductory committee of Duncan P. Cameron, Herbert Cochran and Dr. A. C. Jewell talked before the Lions club at its Thursday noon luncheon on the possibilities of aviation and its relationships to this city.
