Genius of Holbein

Recognized by King

When Hans Holbein, the celebrated portrait painter, went to England, he became a favorite of King Henry VIII, who took him into his service, and paid him a salary of 1000 marks a year.

One day, it is said, a nobleman called upon Holbein when the latter was very busy, painting from life. Holbein sent a message to be excused the honor of the visit for that day. The nobleman, highly offended, walked straight upstairs and broke open the door of the studio. At this Holbein also lost his temper, and aimed a blow at the intruder which sent him from the top of the stairs to the bottom. When his passion had cooled down, the artist realized his danger and wisely went out on the king, to whom he told the story of the quarrel. Shortly afterward, the nobleman made his appearance, claiming for vengeance. Henry made Holbein apologize, but the angry peer declared that nothing but the offender's death would content him. Whereupon Holbein replied, "You have not now to deal with Holbein, but with me. Whatever harm you do him shall rebound tenfold on your own head. Whenever I please I can make seven lords out of seven plowmen, but of seven lords I could not make one Holbein."

American Children as Frenchman Sees Them

"American children are 'insouciant, over-mind and gay,' so writes a noted observer in Comedie, a Paris paper, after a visit to the United States. 'They work without effort, that is to say, very little. They only learn the indispensable. In the big cities many streets are reserved for them and their plays. They are safe from the life-crushing juggernauts of modern traffic. At the same time, an American child upholds his own opinion against that of his parents and opposes his 'reactions' to their reactions.' They are treated and addressed as if they were adults. At fifteen they go out to earn a living, without losing their innocence and their gaiety. They will have known neither laziness nor indolence. And they will die without having noticed that they have lived. Quietness and retreat to the eventide of life, preparation for death; those are unknown things in a country where death is but an insignificant detail."—Pierre Vna Passen, in the Atlanta Constitution.

Like Dynamite

There is nothing that a man will not do for the woman he truly loves! There is a type of woman who knows this and who, after having won the devoted love of a man, proceeds to use that love as a means of gaining her purely selfish ends.

Many a woman of this type is hopelessly extravagant. She knows that her husband will make any sacrifice to gratify even her slightest whim. But she often does not know that the very love which makes him spoil her will make him violently condemn her if she indulges in dangerous indiscretions.

Love is somewhat like dynamite. If properly handled it can serve the most useful purposes. If treated carelessly, it can cause havoc and even death.—True Story Magazine

Army Rations Long Ago

How the American soldiers in the old fort of Detroit used to fare is indicated in a warrant recorded in September, 1797, contained in the records of Otto Stoll, register of deeds, and signed by Edward Day, department commissary. The warrant reads: "The United States owe at Detroit to Messrs. Leith, Shepard and Duff, 5,185 rations of soup at 22 cents a pound; 123 pounds beef at 10 cents a pound; 31,736 rations of whisky at $2 a gallon (one half gill being a ration); 5,404 rations ofandles at 24 cents a pound, and 24,886 rations of vinegar at 6 cents a quart. All of which quantities have become due to the soldiery anterior to this date as appears by due bills of the assistant commissary."

Mirrors 3,000 Years Old

When the modern girl picks up a hand-mirror to admire herself she is only following the example of young women of 3,000 years ago. Archeologists in Media, in Greece, have discovered in tombs of the Mycenaean period several hand-mirrors, one with an ivory handle. Silvered glass was unknown in those days, and mirrors were made of sheets of polished metal. Even before polished metal was used, girls had their mirrors. They used to polish stone, dipping it into water so that the thin film of liquid would serve as a reflecting surface.

Skunks Show Mercy

Under the skunk Geneva convention the use of a gas-attack is strictly forbidden in any battle which only skunks are engaged in, says Nature Magazine. In such a fight the combatants depend entirely on tooth and claw. Sometimes that fierce leath-in-the-dark, the great horned owl, will occasionally pounce on a strolling skunk. Usually, however, he finds that the latter's antiaircraft armament is too strong for him and retires without honor to baa about with him the aftermath of his raid until his next molting.

Grammar

There had been a train wreck, and one of two traveling authors felt himself slipping from this life "Good-by, Tom," he groaned to his friend. "I'm done for." "Don't say that, old man," spluttered the friend. "For goodness' sake don't end your last sentence with a prepositional phrase."—Vancouver Province.

Fourth Passes Quietly.
The glorious Fourth passed quietly in Cottage Grove except for the noise of torpedoes and firecrackers fired by the few who remained in the city. No celebration was held here and the larger number of residents attended celebrations elsewhere or sought picnic spots for the day.

The American Legion furnished the Columbia float for the Eugene celebration, the American Legion drum corps was entered and boy scout troops from here were also in the parade. It was reported that the drum corps won second prize.

Drowning Report is Unfounded.
A report that a resident of Cottage Grove had been drowned yesterday at Winchester bay seems to have been without foundation. Three were drowned at the bay when they drove their car into a portion of the bay by accident, and Cottage Grove people were at the scene of the accident, but so far as known no one is missing from here.

Lacked the Loot's Dignity.
It is war time. Seeing a khaki-clad figure passing, the private called out:

"Hey, Buddie, gimme a light."

The doughboy looking up to thank his "buddie," discovered to his amazement the star of a brigadier.

"I beg your pardon, sir," he said, "I didn't mean any disrespect. I didn't notice you was a general."

"That's all right, Buddie," said the general—who apparently was a regular "guy," "but you should thank God I wasn't a second lieutenant."—Manchester Guardian.

INDEPENDENCE

IN 1876, one hundred years after the signing of the Declaration of Independence, the first telephone circuit was installed on the Pacific Coast. This marked the beginning of a new freedom—freedom from the bonds of distance.

For today, distance is not a barrier to the transmission of thought by speech. The last half century has seen the development of the telephone from small beginnings to a vast network of voice highways extending throughout the length and breadth of the nation.

From your own telephone you are within speaking distance of over 70,000 cities and towns throughout the United States and many points in Mexico, Canada and Europe.
