

WE HUSBANDS SHOULD STAND TOGETHER

First Husband: "It's getting so a mere husband's opinion on household matters hasn't the chance of a fly. We should do something about it! Let's pool our ideas."

Second Husband: "Fine! Now take flour for instance. I know what flour is the largest seller in the West—it's Sperry Drifted Snow."

First Husband: "Great! Let's tell our wives. Maybe they don't all know it. Let's repay them for those life-saving suggestions they give us on what fork to use, what's trumps, and why we should be nice to the Joneses."

VACATION IS OVER

With the coming of the fall rains we realize that the vacation season is growing to a close. Business will begin to bustle and the wise business man will take stock and see that his finances are in condition for the expected increased business. A strong banking connection is just as necessary in times of business revival as during the low ebb. You should prepare for emergencies by having a substantial balance on tap at the old reliable.

'Round the Circle

(By JACK HOWARD.)

ROW RIVER.—Severe frosts hit this section Saturday and Sunday nights and were sufficient to nip the gardens, in some instances quite noticeably, an unusual occurrence for September.

Many complaints are being registered among chicken fanciers as to the great number of chicken hawks. John Wicks, whose home is a mile north of Dorena on Haras creek, reports the loss of several birds, some of them half grown and of the heavy breed of Rhode Islands, and other complaints are coming in. Joe Nadeau, superintendent of the Culp Creek logging camp for Anderson & Middleton, who had been busy protecting equipment from fire in the upper canyon, reports an unusual number of hawks frequenting the woodlands and in the old cuttings lower down adjacent to valley farms. He has thoughtfully packed a light 410 caliber shot gun with him on his rounds of inspection, with the net result of some half dozen of the disturbers of the peace and dignity of the chicken pens, to his credit.

If there is anything in signs, it is pointed out by pioneer interpreters, we may look for a bit of early snappy weather and possibly a cold winter. Large bands of geese have, within the past week, been cruising the air seas, with sail set to the southlands; vegetation is taking on the dress of winter; grouse and quail are taking on some of their winter habits, among which is the frequenting of their late fall and winter feeding grounds; hazelnuts and dogwood seed buds have matured early and have been harvested by the wild animals dependent thereon; many deer are reported close in, and that sagacious brute—the coyote—is sending forth his challenge from the lower ridges.

Perhaps of all the destructive pests that come to disturb the rancher with a fine pen of chickens in his assets, the daring coyote and wild cat are the worst, and it is a toss-up as to which is the most dreaded. Ben Piteher, who resides on his ranch on Layng creek, has been away from home during the day throughout the greater part of the summer; and while Mrs. Piteher is thoroughly at home on the ranch and would go a long way in protection of their stock, these animals seem to know that when there is no man about their chance is good for a dinner most any hour of the day, and they seem to have the faculty of knowing when the man is off the job. Mr. and Mrs. Piteher have lost many half grown birds the past few weeks, by either a coyote or a cat—probably a cat—so thinks Ben—and he should know, for he is a hunter of known local reputation. The tragedies have occurred in the middle of the day, during his absence. Mrs. Piteher pointed out the spot where a big hen made her last protest the other day, and it was within five rods of the house, between the house and the barn, in plain sight. Hearing the cry, Mrs. Piteher got into the yard as soon as possible, but hen and vermin were gone. Several dozen birds have been taken this way and Mrs. Piteher has not once been quick enough to get a sight of the thief. But never mind, Ben will be home one of these days—and he won't telephone the news to the woods tribe. Then he will slip a shell or two in that old 30-30 that in times past has stood him in hand many times on the bear and wolf trail. Then he will comfortably post himself in a secluded spot convenient to the haunts of the feathered tribe. When Sir Coyote flashes over the fence, there will be an almost simultaneous flash and it will be "just too bad!" for Mr. Coyote.

Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Grendahl of Moffett Springs, Wash., spent the week end with Mrs. Grendahl's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. O. McKinney, of Bedrock, who recently took over the Wes Chrisman store at that point at the mouth of Teeters creek.

Mrs. J. M. Crossan of Salem, accompanied by her daughter Norma and son Merle, and Clifford Ballchiff and Lyle Sheppard, are spending a few days on Row river at the home of Mrs. Crossan's daughter, Mrs. W. C. Shearer. A chat your correspondent had yesterday with Mr. Boxey, who a few months ago purchased the Lib Gillispie ranch of 149 acres, across Row river adjacent to the Bohemia Lumber company's old mill site, was a pleasant one. Mr. and Mrs. Boxey are originally from Nebraska, but came into the west, like it and here they are anchored. At first they located near Crosswell, but opportunity came to dispose of their interests to their liking and from there they came to Cottage Grove, where they purchased a home with a tract of seven acres, where they lived for the best part of a year and until they came into this new possession. The Row river place is better known as the Sid Vaughn ranch, where Mr. and Mrs. Vaughn lived for many years when Mr. Vaughn was active in saw milling circles of this section. Mr. Boxey will give attention to dairying, which at present is up to a ten-cow plant. Some general farming, stock raising, including hogs, ducks and chickens, will also have his attention. Yesterday he was preparing to put down a young hog for winter meat. When asked whether he didn't think the weather a trifle warm for curing, the farmer said, "No, not the way I handle it. I have a good formula I have used many times with success, and when the curing process is over to my liking, we 'fry down' and pack away. This way the meat keeps indefinitely and is as sweet and palatable as fresh cut meat." Just one unpleasant thing has happened since they came here, Mrs. Boxey, in anticipation that before long they would again find a ranch that suited them, worked hard all spring and summer hatching and raising a fine pen of several dozen choice Rhode Island Reds. The next night after having moved this beautiful flock of half grown pullets to the ranch, five dozen were stolen. It was rather late when Mr. Boxey got anything like tangible evidence as to the thieves, but he intimated that he is now in possession of facts that in the end may prove disastrous to a system of thievery that has been going on in this section for some time.

New Fuel Pit Reminiscent Of Horse Trough of Yesterday

The Airplane being fueled here belongs to Pilot "Sunny" Metzger

Close-up view of the most modern type of airplane Service Station, now in operation at the Oakland Municipal Airport

Yesterday you fueled "Charley" at the water trough; tomorrow you'll taxi your plane up the field to a deluxe underground service station.

The first system on the Pacific coast for fueling planes from pits was recently installed at the Oakland municipal airport by the Associated Oil company. In a short time all oil and gasoline trucks will be banned from the field. The above illustration displays equipment of the servicing pit—a steel box, the top of which is set flush with the ground and sufficiently strong to support the heaviest plane. Housed in the pit are a metal-lined gasoline hose with nozzle control, air hose and water hose, wound on wheels and capable of serving planes within a radius of fifty feet. One of the principal features of the pumping unit which includes a motor-driven pump with by-pass and relief valve, is the air release. It permits any air in the line to escape, thus assuring the delivery of a solid stream of gasoline through the hose. A centrifugal filter removes water or moisture, while a screen catches any dirt particles that may be in the gasoline.

According to installation engineers, this new servicing unit insures perfect delivery of gasoline, accurately checked, in any quantity, with increased speed of approximately 20 gallons a minute.
