'King of Kings' Stands Out as Great Picture. Film Which Closes Engagement Tonight Contributes Beauty to Screen.

To be transported back to Galilee and the streets of Judea at a time when a Man gave to the world a great opportunity—to follow the path of that Man through an amazing series of engrossing epochal events—such is the central work of Cecil B. DeMille's motion picture, "The King of Kings," which recently pictures the wondrous drama of Jesus, teacher and healer.

Jesus is seen through the eyes of a blind girl whose sight He restored; the love and enthusiasm of the boy John Mark who was enabled to throw away his crutches; the seven deadly sins being driven out of the proud Mary of Magdala are shown.

The various biblical characters in the gospel of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John are easily recognizable. Unquestionably the most characteristic is H. B. Warner in the role of Jesus of Nazareth, first portrayed as the artisan Healer in Galilee, next as the Divine Man who cleansed the temple, finally identified by His disciples and by the centurion who saw Him dying on the cross.

Ernest Torrence is a wonderful St. Peter, while Joseph Schildkraut contributes a remarkable study of Judas, who betrays his Master for 30 pieces of silver. Set against the portrayal of the Divine Man by Warner are two powerful worldly characters, the High Priest Caiaphas, portrayed by Randolph Schildkraut, and the Roman Governor Pilate, enacted by Victor Varconi. One must go through a long roster to summarize the playing of the hundreds of capable actors from William Boyd as Simon, who bore the Saviour's cross, to Montagu Love, the stern Roman centurion, and from George Siegmann as the outlaw Barabbas to the courtly Seneca as the Pharisee, or to the little boy and girl, portrayed by M. Moore and Muriel McCormack, who were cured by the Healer.

Among the women, Jacqueline Logan's splendid characterization of Mary Magdalene stands out as one of the greater pieces of acting in the film of this era. Dorothy Ganning as the holy mother and Julia Faye and Josephine Numan as Martha and Mary of Bethany contribute worthy portrayals.

"The King of Kings" is not mere movie entertainment—it brings beauty into the lives of all.

Good Counsel. A man may think, if he will, that two eyes see no more than one; or that a gamster sees always more than a looker-on—but when all is done, the help of good counsel is that which setteth business straight.—Bacon.
