Mrs. McAboy Known For Charity, Is Dead

Mrs. Lucinda Jane McAboy, widow of Edgar McAboy, died about 3 o'clock Wednesday morning at the Pacific Christian hospital in Eugene. She had been a resident of this city for eight years. She was aged 70 years, 4 months, 8 days. Mrs. McAboy had been suffering for a month or more but had not paid much attention to it, thinking it came from a minor cause. She was taken suddenly ill Tuesday afternoon and was removed to the hospital that afternoon.

Funeral services will be held at 4 o'clock Friday afternoon in the Presbyterian church, with Rev. Dan P. Cameron officiating.

Lucinda Jane Strang was born October 30, 1858, in Fairbault, Minn. She lived in Snohomish, Wash., for a number of years before coming to this city. She survived by four children, Mrs. H. C. Schaefer, Cottage Grove; Will McAboy, Redwood City, Cal.; Charles McAboy and Paul McAboy, Seattle, Wash.

Mrs. McAboy was a member of the Presbyterian church, was president of the W. C. T. U. and of the Mothers' club and was a member of the Ladies of the Invisible Empire. For 14 years she belonged to the W. C. T. U. of Snohomish, Wash., and served a term as president. Mrs. McAboy was an active worker in welfare work in this city and handled the distribution of clothing for the community chest.

Rev. Cameron praised her character as wonderfully fine and spoke highly of her ability in organizing and handling welfare work. Though she was well along in years, Rev. Cameron said, she viewed life from a youthful aspect.

The body will be sent to Snohomish for burial.

HOW TO GROW FLOWERS AND SHRUBBERY IS TOLD

The first of a series of instructional lectures, planned to interest both city and country residents, was held last night in city hall by the local Legion post. Lectures, on how to grow flowers and shrubbery, were the subject of the lecture. Ray Vinson, who is in the Oregon fern and greenhouse business here, and Elmo Chase of Chase Gardens in Eugene were the speakers.

Great interest was shown by those present, many taking notes. The meeting was later turned into an open forum and the speakers answered questions.

Mr. Vinson pointed out that many persons make the mistake of covering the top soil with soil underneath in making lawns, a practice which makes good lawn growing difficult. He told of means of renovating lawns and advised the use of lime and sulphur to keep the ground sweet and free of moss. He also gave several mixtures of both grass and clover that make satisfactory lawns.

Among the native plants which Mr. Vinson listed as suitable for planting in gardens were Oregon grape and several varieties of ferns. He said that often it was expensive to get these plants and transplant them. In setting shrubbery he advised that plenty of room be provided and that the shrubbery should not be placed too close to buildings. He also declared that some pruning of shrubs was necessary each year.

Mr. Chase talked on both annual and perennial flowers. He described color combinations and said that the tendency now was to plant in banks or large groupings instead of individual plants. In planting along driveways masses of plants are used instead of few as formerly.

In growing sweetpeas Mr. Chase said it is necessary to dig a trench about two feet deep and to fill this with rich soil and manure before planting the seed. He said too many fail to properly loosen and prepare the soil before planting sweetpeas.

He told of the uses to which sweet williams can be put in making flower gardens. Zinnias, Mr. Chase said, were one of the most satisfactory flowers for all uses.

The second lecture in the series will be given Wednesday night at 7:30 in the city hall and will consist of a discussion by O. S. Fletcher, county agent, on insect pests of flowers and vegetable gardens and a lecture by Professor Bouquet of Oregon State college on gardens for farm and town.

PLANS BEING MADE FOR HEALTH DAY PROGRAM

Plans for the observance of child health day and a blue ribbon health program were discussed at a meeting Monday afternoon of the Cottage Grove branch of the Lane County Public Health association. The May Day health program will be put on by the children of the public schools. Superintendent D. A. Emerson will be in charge of the program.

Miss Beth Konkel, executive secretary of the health association, and Miss Bess Williams, county health nurse, attended the meeting and gave a comprehensive report of health work done in the county. Three tubercular patients from Cottage Grove are in the state sanitarium and the children of these homes have been tested for tuberculosis.

The Cottage Grove group is trying to arrange passage to and from Portland for two Cottage Grove children who need to go to the Duernbecher hospital for an examination. Anyone wishing to help is asked to get in touch with Mrs. Schofield Stewart, general chairman of the local group, or with Miss Konkel.

Mrs. Karl K. Mills is chairman of the committee in charge of a membership drive which will start in May.

It was suggested that women's clubs of the city be asked to donate sheets and pillow cases for a loan closet maintained by the health group.

Cottage Prayer Meetings Planned. Cottage prayer meetings for the east side district of the Methodist church have been arranged for the coming week by Mrs. J. H. Chambers, who is in charge of the district. The prayer meetings are held in conjunction with the revival meetings at the church. The schedule follows: March 11, Mrs. Joe Burnett; March 12, Hester Reed; March 13, Mrs. Charles Burge; March 14, Mrs. William Burge; March 15, Mrs. Albert Woodard. All meetings will be held at 10 a. m.

VITAPHONE

The Romantic Story of the Warner Brothers and the History of Vitaphone Talking Pictures

By JOHN LEARY PELTRET

SYNOPSIS

...Lined in Baltimore, Warner Bros. began their career as exhibitors in 1903, then opened a film exchange, were put out of business by a film combine, were traveling exhibitors, then distributors in Pittsburgh. This connection proved unsatisfactory, so Warner Bros. sold out, going broke for the second time. Then they established Warner Features, were unable to get capital to carry on, and once more were against the wall.

CHAPTER 3

In spite of their troubles the Warner Bros. were not discouraged. Beatings by this time, had made them harder to beat. They were surely uncomfortable, but refused to acknowledge defeat. Smiling a bit wryly at one another, the Warner Bros. called another post mortem, brought in a report that nothing could stop them, and announced that they would continue as producers.

Success is Achieved Complete faith in themselves and one another, plus experience, was the capital with which Warner Bros. started to regain their place as producers of first class pictures. They had learned much of the devious ways of finance and corporate control. Harry, as president, took active charge of general operations, Albert was the financial man, Sam looked after distribution and Jack directed production. Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., was organized and continues to this day, making silent and Vitaphone Talking Pictures.

It had always been a tenet of the Warner way that mediocrity was a liability. They established a rule to make fewer and better pictures. They continued to be the up and coming Warners, but wiser and better men than when they began. It was not long before the exhibitors and the public became familiar with the Warner quality. It counted on the credit side of the ledger. Soon after the beginning of this period in their experiences, James interested in these devices, as he had a mechanical mind. Warner Bros. had investigated at least twenty of them. Keeping pace with progress a broadcasting station was installed in the Hollywood Studio. The engineer who put it in was in constant touch with Frank Murphy, studio chief engineer.

The business grew so fast that they built a Studio in Hollywood, then acquired the Vitaphone Company and moved into the Brooklyn plant of that organization. Warner Bros. kept step with the great for-

Murphy and the radio engineer became close friends. In the course of time the radio man mentioned that the Western Electric Co. and Bell Telephone Laboratories, Inc., were working on a device to unite speech and pictures. The detailed description interested Murphy and he told Sam Warner about it. The result was Warner determined immediately on his re-demonstration. As he had journeyed to New York he reflected that his brother Harry had often said the motion picture business went ahead so fast it was like a limited train. It merely hesitated at main stops and flashed by the smaller ones. You had to step fast to get aboard. All the Warner Bros. sensed that the business of producing pictures was due for one of those fantastic changes which had marked its history from the beginning.

It was not a perfected exhibition which the scientists and engineers were able to show. The picture was one of a man holding a violin. He lifted the instrument and his bow. As bow touched strings music came forth in unison with his movements. There were many other sounds the delicate microphone had picked up. But Warner Bros. saw that here at last was the base of a practical method for combining music and speech with pictures. Always before something had stopped the accomplishment of that aim, but there was a chance with this.

After a thorough investigation Warner Bros. determined to stake everything on the new invention. Arrangements were made with the Western Electric Co. and Bell Telephone Laboratories to continue the experiments at the Vitaphone Studio in Brooklyn. They had come out of the dark woods into the sunlight of success through faith and vision. They were determined that Warner Bros. would be in the forefront of any change in their business. All their resources were put into the development of Vitaphone.

ward strides in the business of making pictures. Trouble loomed again. Quarrel how those Warner boys just did attract trouble. The entire film business went into the doldrums. The vast audiences began to melt away. The public had become "film wise." The condition affected the entire field and was a serious one.

Almost from the beginning inventors had tried to link speech or music with motion pictures. Sam, of the Warners, was particularly turn to New York to have a look at the new machine. First View of Vitaphone The Warner vision was at work again. Reaching New York, Sam Warner made an appointment for a
