Writer Gives Us New Picture of Kitchener

It was while Kitchener's train was waiting at Elandslaagte that I was introduced by a member of his staff. My first sensation was one of disappointment. "K" was a very big, heavy-looking man with a forbidding, rather repulsive face.

He had a slight cast in one eye, and his manner at that interview was a little harsh and overbearing. The Tommy who described him as "Gawd's young brother Alf" was understandable.

And yet Kitchener was in truth a very gentle, shy and simple soul. It may seem a fantastic suggestion, but I shall always contend that G. W. Stevens ruined Kitchener when he wrote his fanciful pen-picture of the man in "With Kitchener to Khartoum."

Stevens shows him as a man of ice and blood—a man without bowels of compassion, remorseless, ruthless, relentless. I have the impression that Kitchener spent the greater part of his life trying to live up to that reputation, and that all his ferocity, his seeming boorishness, and his invariable aloofness, were due to another man's estimate which he had all too willingly accepted.—Edgar Wallace, in his autoblography, "People."

Only Two Species of Flowers in Antarctic

The Antarctic regions support only two species of flowering plants, as against some 400 species grown in the Arctic regions. This is probably due to the shortness of the Antarctic summer and the remarkably low temperatures, for no month there has a mean temperature above the freezing point. The plant life is confined to the edges of the continent, the mountain ranges and the islands near the coast.

As a rule, it is not until far into December that the sun lays bare what little soil occurs in a few places, and the vegetation—with the exception of lichens on cliff faces—is exposed to sunlight for only a month or six weeks. The ground thaws to a depth of several inches on a few clear days, and even then is saturated with ice-cold water. Mosses are numerous, more than fifty species have been recorded.—New York Herald Tribune.

Need a Good Memory

The ability of the officeholder or officeseeker to remember faces and names is a valuable asset. Though the elevator boy occupies a humbler station, a good memory is just as essential in his work. He must remember the name of the person who called this or that apartment, and the message. Packages without addresses are left in his care, and he must make no mistake in delivering them. The baby in its peramublator outside is crying. The apartment is filed with babies; he could make no greater blunder than to call the wrong mother. Members of a family go out, telling him to tell other members when they will be in, and what to do while waiting. He is rewarded, but often not in proportion to the tasks put upon his memory.—Boston Herald.

Courteous Spaniard

The palace of the Escorial, where the mortal remains of Spanish royal personages are laid to rest, is one of the gloomiest collections of buildings imaginable. Yet, says a writer in the London Daily Chronicle, I have a very pleasant recollection of it. I was walking from Segovia to Madrid, and wanted to see the Escorial on the way. I inquired from a countryman how to reach the palace. He at once offered to guide me, and did so for several miles. Then he utterly refused, with graceful Spanish courtesy, to take any reward. The heavy halls and chapels could not depress me after that display of kindly fellowship.

Dumas Loved to Eat

The last of the books that emanated from the facile pen of Alexander Dumas, the great French writer, was a cook book. It contained recipes for preparing eggs in 56 different ways. The famous author was as happy over the perfection of an original dish as he was at the successful creation of a fiction character. The value he himself placed on his cookery is revealed in his own words: "I see with pleasure that my culinary reputation is increasing and promises soon to efface my literary reputation."

Expected Too Much

They were looking over a house the agent warmly recommended. It was in rather poor condition, and one room appeared to be particularly dilapidated.

"But look, man!" cried the prospective tenant. "We couldn't live in a place like this! Why, there's actually moss growing on that damp wall."

The house agent flushed.

"My dear sir," he retorted indignantly, "at the rental I'm asking, you surely don't expect orchids, do you?"

Fighting Fire in Home

In case a fire starts in a room, close all doors and windows to prevent a draft. Give the alarm promptly. A few pails of water thrown on at first may do more good than thousands of gallons later. A blaze may often be smothered with a rug or blanket. If the clothes catch fire, lay the patient flat on the floor at once; running about fans the flames, which tend to burn upward toward the face. Smother the flames with a heavy coat, rug or blanket, if water is not at hand.

An Eye for Color

A little girl recently skinned her knee and her mother promptly applied a bright-colored antiseptic.

Several days later the mother served cold meats and catsup. The little girl, seeing her father generously helping himself to catsup, demanded: "Mother, I want some meat with mercurochrome on it."

Montana Holds Cold Record

Scientists believe that the maximum low temperature at the North pole is from 50 to 60 degrees below zero. Lower temperatures have been recorded in the United States. For instance, a temperature of 68 degrees below zero has been recorded at Havre, Mont.—Pathfinder Magazine.

No Standing Still

Progress is essential in this life. But whether it shall be forward or backward is for you to decide. You cannot stand still. This is impossible. The world is only a stairway on which men go either up or down.—Grit.

Thinks He Has Special Reason for Complaint

The driver of a small car, parked in a crowded downtown section, stopped short and stared at the apparent nakedness of the machine. The spare tire was missing.

With a nonchalant shrug, he muttered something about "thieves will be thieves" and began to climb into the machine. But he stopped short again and stooped to pick up a wrench from the running board. His face grew crimson and the things he said were terms not generally employed by frequenters of social teas.

"What's the trouble?" asked the Stroller.

"A lot!" he snapped. "I don't mind these crooks stealing my tire, but when they open my car and take my tools to do it with, that's too much!"—Philadelphia Public Ledger.
