French Beggars Flock to Their Special Mass

The great church of Sacre Coeur (Sacred Heart) on the heights of Montmartre, Paris, has a feature that could not be duplicated in any other church in the world. Every Sunday morning at eight o'clock there is "Beggars' Mass." Painfully climbing the steps come hundreds of the down-and-outs of Paris, some hatless and shoeless, others in rags and still others bent over with physical infirmities. But they are proud of their special service, and the mass is said to them by the chief dignitary of the church. The service is complete in everything but the collection. As the poor go out each receives 25 centimes—a nickel in the old days—and a card good for a large piece of bread. On special church days the gift is increased, and the attendance is larger. An office is also maintained to help them get work. Speaking of these Sunday services a church dignitary said: "If there remains a spark under the ashes it may be fanned to flame. Many there are who are to their comfort here the straightening of a broken life."—Pathfinder Magazine.

Romance of Brownings

By modern standards, says David Loth in "The Brownings," Robert Browning and Elizabeth Barrett started their love cruelly. A hand-clasp was beyond all Barrett's daring. A kiss was something mentioned in poetry but never attempted in real life. However, they derived a certain pleasure from the realization that their love could thrive on a diet of mere words. And of words they were prodigal indeed. Over the exchange of a lock of hair they lavished enough of ingenuity and lyrical expression to have made a trunkful of the kind of plays Robert wrote. His letter suggesting that she trust him with a wisp of black curl was a masterpiece of dignified pleading worthy of a request for a couple of dukedoms and a principality. He felt greatly daring and would be might. An expert on the subject of the Brownings, the author of the book, says that the poet probably required a Supreme court interpretation to settle the matter.

More Foreign Cars Than Oregon Using Highways

A traffic count conducted on all state highways in the county Thursday revealed the fact that there are more out of state cars passing over Pacific highway than Oregon cars. The count on all roads was unusually heavy.

On Pacific highway north of the junction of Willamette highway at Goshen 2935 cars passed between 6 o'clock a. m. and 10 o'clock p. m. Of this number 1179 were out of state cars.

South of Willamette highway 2441 were counted, more than half of the number being foreign.

On the same highway at Yoncalla 1111 cars out of 1913 bore licenses of other states.

The enumerators found that more cars travel the west side highway than the east, as 1997 was the figure for cars using the road between Monmouth and Junction City, while 1776 cars came at west via Harrisburg.

On McKenzie highway at Thurston 794 cars were counted. At the Deschutes county line near the summit 211 cars were seen.

Siuslaw highway was used by 341 cars at a point 15 miles west of Cheshire and at Greenleaf creek 155 cars passed by the traffic counter. Twenty-two cars were taken across the Siuslaw on the ferry at Florence.

On the Drain-Redspot highway 103 machines were enumerated.

Masterpiece of Screen To Be Shown in Eugene

Produced by film experts in their respective fields, Cecil B. DeMille's latest contribution to the American screen, "The Godless Girl," will have its first showing in Lane county today, Friday and Saturday at the Colonial theater in Eugene.

The story, which was written by Joseph Magerman, is in every sense of the word a masterpiece.

Personally directed by Mr. DeMille for Pathé, the picture ranks as one of his finest efforts. It is dramatic, its venture massive, the theme exceptionally impressive. The cast is one of the strongest ever chosen for any photoplay.

"The Godless Girl" is a powerful arraignment of the effect of irreverence upon present day youth and of more or less reprehensible practices in modern reformatories. Although the picture presents in graphic style truths of which society is amply aware, it is so preachment, but from start to finish, virile screen entertainment that will delight and amaze film fans the world over.

What the Ads Did It was only a few years ago that retail stores in towns and the smaller cities did the bulk of their week's business on Saturdays. While the other five business days might have paid expenses the merchant depended upon the Saturday sales for the major portion of the week's profit. Needless to say the average merchant would have been exempt from the excess profits taxes in those days. The newspaper is given credit for discovering the possibility of scattering the Saturday peak load over the six business days of the week and it was newspaper advertising which brought about the present more equitable distribution of the week's business. Saturday is still the merchant's busy day, but now he is only a little less busy on the preceding five days. This is only one of the many services performed for business by newspaper advertising. It is irrefutable that a great part of increase in business experienced by the retail stores generally in recent years has been created by newspaper advertising. Newspaper advertising has been the Aladdin's lamp of the retail merchant. There are still isolated towns where one may see for himself what "might have been" the nation over if newspaper advertising had never been.—Hartisdale, New York Times.

Ralph Waldo Emerson

Child of Merry Month The month of May brought this country some men who were to become immortal. It brought to a house in Summer street, Boston, from whose windows could be heard the tinkling of cowbells and could be seen stately rows of elm trees and Lombardy poplars a baby boy, the fourth child of the minister of the First church. This child grew up "in an atmosphere of letters, quite apart by himself." He was a spirited looking boy in blue nankens, who found more favor with his elders than with those of his own age. He was serious, but he was not solemn.

Like his father, he became a minister, but resigned his pulpit after a few years because he felt cramped in spirit by the orthodoxy of the day. He went to live in Concord and was called a sage. A sage he still is, and there are very few people the world over who have not read some of Ralph Waldo Emerson's teachings.

How little he would have sympathized with the "Puritan of Puritans" who struck down the Maypole in 1629! For this is what he says of beauty: "All privilege is that of beauty." The question of beauty takes us out of surfaces of thinking of the foundations of things. Beauty is the quality which makes to endure." And he quotes copiously from the Greeks to illustrate. From the pagan Greeks! What a long road he had traveled, compared with the limited path in which Governor Endicott solemnly took his way!—Exchange.

Negroes in British Empire There are some negroes in England, but the number there is extremely small. The British empire has within its boundaries lands whose populations consist largely of negroes, as, for instance, Jamaica and Central and South Africa. The natives of such countries are British.
