Can't Assign Credit for Invention of Compass

The origin of the mariner's compass is obscure. By some students the instrument was said to have been introduced into Europe from the East. Others say it was a western invention, it was certainly known to European navigators as early as the Twelfth century. Guyot de Provins, whose satirical "bielle" is supposed to have been completed in 1205, described "a contrivance" of sailors which never deceived them. "They have an ugly brown stone which attracts iron," he wrote, "They mark the exact quarter to which the needle points, which they have rubbed on this stone and afterward stuck into a straw. They merely put it in the water, in which the straw causes it to swim; then the point turns directly toward the (North) star, with such certainty that it will never fail." Guyot wrote about the compass as if it were a new thing, but other writers reveal that the English in the Twelfth century had already mounted the needle on a pivot and so done away with the straw and water.—New York Times.

No Prize Offered for "Mare's Nest" Discovery

"Mare's Nest" is a phrase which we occasionally hear and which we understand to refer to almost any sort of a discovery which upon its face first sight seems to be of considerable importance, but which subsequently is ascertained to be a hoax. By inference, therefore, a "mare's nest" has acquired the meaning of something that does not exist. Just how the expression originated is not clearly established. However, it is authentically conceded that it was first employed over 300 years ago by John Fletcher, and that he himself probably adapted it from an earlier phrase, "horse's nest," which, in the then vernacular, referred to any story worn thin by constant repetition. This latter is said to have been first used by Stanyhurst at the end of the Sixteenth century. The line, "He's come upon a mare's nest and is laughing at the eggs," is frequently heard in Ireland to express derision at somebody who thinks he has discovered something starting when in fact something known to all.—Kansas City Times.

Swedes Lovers of Beauty

To keep the Swedish railroad stations cheery, the state-owned railroads maintain a special flower garden and hothouse outside of Stockholm. About 50,000 potted plants and 100,000 perennials are annually distributed to the stations of the Stockholm district alone and the central station in Stockholm gets not only huge potted laurel trees for the summer season, but fresh cut flowers every day. In the country practically every railroad station has its own flower beds, cared for by the personnel between trains and like the spotless buffets and restaurants inside, they add considerably to the joy of travel. Such refinements the Swedes call "trafik kultur."

Bad News

Jenkins married, and in due course his wife presented him with a son. His friends flocked round to tender their congratulations and incidentally, smoke Bill's cigars. Jones was on his way to the house when he met Browning returning. "Where are you going?" asked the latter. "Oh, I'm just going round to see Bill and wish him luck with that youngster of his."

"Then you're too late." "What? Surely it hasn't died?" "No, the youngster's all right, but the cigar box is empty."—Pittsburgh Sun Telegraph.

Camels in Australia

Many camels are used in Australia as beasts of burden. For instance, in the northwestern Australian cattle stations are served by camel trains which carry supplies for hundreds of miles into the interior. "The camels are driven by Afghans," says the National Geographic society. "Camel teams are familiar sights in the streets of the little township, hauling in the great wagonloads of firewood from the outlying district. The first camels were brought to Australia for the use of the early explorers. Later a fine type of dromedary was imported for breeding purposes."

Amber and Meerschaum

Amber can be made to burn when heated to a high temperature in the air. It is a fossil resin from trees of the pine family and is dug up from the shores of the Baltic sea and the North sea and a few other places. It is composed of carbon, hydrogen and oxygen. Meerschaum is a compound of magnesium, silicon and oxygen and resembles a white clay. It is found chiefly in Asia Minor, where it occurs in masses of many colors. Of course the only connection between the two substances is the fact that they are both used in making pipes.

Entirely Too Healthy

Little nine-year-old Jo Ann came home from school one day looking very much disgusted. Her mother inquired as to the cause, and Jo Ann said: "O we had election of officers today and I was elected vice president."

"Well, that's fine; why the downcast countenance?" asked mother. "It would be fine," said Jo Ann, "but John, the healthiest boy in our room, was elected president, and he's never sick so what chance has the vice president?"

His Life Dedicated to Fight on Tuberculosis

Dr. Edward Livingston Trudeau, the pioneer in the modern treatment of tuberculosis in America, was himself a sufferer from the disease. In spite of his illness, however, he did much experimental work as well as diagnosis and treatment. Dr. J. A. Myers, in a sketch of Doctor Trudeau's life in Hygeia Magazine, observes that perhaps nothing in the whole field of medicine in the last fifty years has done so much directly and indirectly to relieve suffering and extend the years of usefulness of so many people as the principles that this physician laid down at the sanitarium at Saranac Lake. It was Trudeau who opened the first laboratory for the study of tuberculosis in America. It was he who first grasped the principle of tuberculosis immunity. It was he who did the first experimental work in tuberculosis in this country. It was he who first stained and visualized the tubercle bacillus in this country. It was he who built that pioneer sanitarium at Saranac Lake which has treated more than 6,500 patients and today stands in the front rank of such institutions.

Sacred Stone of Erin Lodged in Cathedral

The ancient Clough-Oir stone from which Clougher, Ireland, is said to have derived its name, has with the consent of the bishop of Clougher, been placed in the vestibule of St. Macartin's cathedral, to preserve it from the weather. The Clough-Oir stone is said to have been one of the three sacred stones of Erin, the other being the Lia Fail, or Stone of Destiny, which rests under the coronation chair in Westminster abbey, and the Crom Cugh, which is supposed to have bowed before St. Patrick. This famous stone which has hitherto rested against the north wall of the cathedral, was visited at one time by Concober MacVessa, high king of Ulster, Canon Maguire, who wrote a commentary on the register of Clougher in 1490, states: "This sacred stone was preserved on the right of the entrance into the church, and traces of the gold with which it has been covered by the worshippers of the Clough-Oir Celts are still visible."

Early Street Lighting

Some form of artificial light must have been in use for domestic purposes from the very earliest times, but though large cities and a high state of civilization existed among the Egyptians, Greeks and Romans, the systematic lighting of streets was unknown to them. From the writings of Libanius, however, who lived in the beginning of the Fourth century after Christ, we may conclude that the streets of his native city, Antioch, were lighted by lamps, and Edessa, in Syria, was the earliest illuminated city. The first to light its streets, in the beginning of the Sixteenth century it was much infested with robbers and incendiaries, so that the inhabitants were ordered in 1524 to keep lights burning after nine o'clock in the evening before all houses fronting a street.

Louisiana Purchase

In the treaty providing for the Louisiana purchase there was no definition of the boundaries of the territory. When the American commissioners insisted upon a definition of the extent, they were informed that the boundaries were the same as they had been when the land was in the hands of the French, that is, according to Barthier's original treaty of retrocession. It included Louisiana west of the Mississippi, Arkansas, Missouri, Iowa, Minnesota west of the Mississippi, the Dakotas, Nebraska, Wyoming, Montana, most of Kansas, Indian territory and Colorado east of the Rocky mountains.

Famous Building

The Mormon tabernacle in Salt Lake City is 250 feet long by 150 feet wide and 80 feet high, and seats from 6,000 to 8,000 people. Its self-supporting roof rests on pillars or buttresses of red sandstone, which are from ten to twelve feet apart in the entire circumference of the building. No nails were used in making the roof, the timbers being held in place with cords and held together with wooden pegs. It was begun in 1833. In its shape the Mormon tabernacle is a perfect ellipse.

River Divides States

The north bank of the Ohio river is the northern boundary of the state of Kentucky, the exact boundary line being fixed by the low-water mark of the river. The jurisdiction of the state of Kentucky extends to the low-water mark on the Indiana side. The United States government has jurisdiction over the whole river, as far as commerce is concerned. According to the Constitution the federal government has a right to regulate commerce, and the Ohio river is the commercial highway.

Matter of Relationship

Half brothers and sisters have one parent in common. Stepbrothers and sisters have no parent in common. When a man with children marries a woman with children these children are stepbrothers and sisters to each other. A child or children resulting from the union of this man and woman would be half brothers or sisters to each of the other sets of children.

Pete Nelson Exhibits Golf Knockout

P. L. Tommison from Canada, who is visiting his nephew, Pete Nelson, sustained a painful injury while on the golf course Friday. Mr. Tommison had expressed a desire to learn some of the local tricks of golf and his nephew, Pete Nelson, a golf expert, generously offered to demonstrate the finer points of the ancient Scottish pastime. The lesson progressed in the usual way until the performance reached the second tee. This is a 285-yard hole with a creek hazard just beyond the tee and Pete had carefully selected his club to give the proper demonstration of how to carry the creek and get on the green in two. His form was so good and his explanations so absorbing that Mr. Tommison forgot caution and approached too near the tee. The head of Pete's club on the back swung collided with his uncle's nose and broke it. By mutual consent the lesson was called off and it is still a moot question whether Pete can carry the creek and par the hole. While Pete broke no bones, record he did prove that a mid-iron in the hands of a navy-trained man is just as effective a weapon as a 16-inch gun. Mr. Tommison, who has been visiting here and in Coquille for two weeks, is recovering satisfactorily from his broken nose and, while he approves of the Cottage Grove country, he has decided to stay away from the golf course, at least when Pete is playing.

POTENT POISON FOUND IN LANE MADE BOOZE

Those who patronize Lane county still operators are running a big risk, an analysis of the product of one still shows. Of the five main ingredients found were found to be extremely poisonous. Having heard many a convivial soul boast the virtues of the "good corn likker" made in the Lane county hills as contrasted with the well known "phone stuff" imported from other parts, Sheriff Harry Bown had chemists make a test of several gallons found west of Eugene. Fused oil, metallic residues and reducing aldehydes, all extremely poisonous, were found mixed with the less dangerous ethyl alcohols and glycerin. The report from the Pacific laboratories follows: Constituents found on fractional distillation: I. Normal amount of ethyl alcohol. II. Large quantities of fused oil. Amyl alcohol I. Propyl alcohol I. Butyl alcohol II. III. Metallic residues. Probably tin or zinc. IV. Traces of reducing aldehydes. V. Slight amount of glycerin. Conclusion: The above report is from a sample of moonshine made from a crude still in which the temperature is allowed to mount to the point where abnormal amounts of higher alcohols (fused oil) are mixed with the product. Wood alcohol as well as ether was absent and the metallic residues are probably from either the condensing coil or the container for the finished product.
