How Great Men Died. When Napoleon felt that his last hour was approaching, he did not put on the imperial robe and crown, but asked to be dressed in his field marshal's uniform, even to the boots.

Augustus Caesar arose from his couch, carefully adjusted his feet and met death standing. Julius Caesar, when slain, drew the folds of his toga over his face that his enemies might not see his death agony. Seward, earl of Northumberland, left his bed and put on his armor, saying: "A man should not die like a beast." Lord Nelson, while being carried below with a fatal bullet in his back, took out a silk handkerchief and covered his face to conceal it from the crew.

Intelligent Locusts. The locusts are the only living beings that "have made the world safe for democracy." They are the only ones who have actually learned the secret of co-operation. They have absolutely no overhead charges. They do not have to support a king, nor pay a horde of professional politicians and government officials to manage them, while they themselves do the work. By some masterly system of "get-together" they perfect an excellent organization without leadership, and without internal dissension. That is more than any collection of human beings has ever been able to accomplish.

It is much easier to cut potato balls with a French vegetable cutter before cooking, as they hold together better.

Food for Argument in Matter of Doughnuts

No matter how long a man has lived, he is likely to have a few incorrect ideas that right reason has never been able to correct. We knew a man once who sold doughnuts of his own fabrication. He had laid up quite a little money and was doing very well. He vended a large-sized doughnut and his argument always had been that the larger the hole, the less dough in the doughnut. He specialized, of course, on large holes and small profits.

This was all very well until, one day on his rounds, he met an argumentative man. Unfortunately, the doughnut man, in a moment of confidence, expounded to him his theory of the large hole and small profits. The argumentative man shook his head. He spent some time at it, but he finally convinced the doughnut man that he had been working his business on a fallacy. The argumentative man proved to the doughnut vender, and by the mathematics, that the smaller the hole in the doughnut, the less dough it took to go around it.

The doughnut man went home and figured over the matter so long and so intently that he was eventually brought to his senses and had to be confined. A. J. R. in the Minneapolis Journal.

Reached Enemy's Heart Through His Stomach. Mrs. Laura Fraser, the original Becky Thatcher of Mark Twain's "Tom Sawyer," related before her death at Hannibal, Mo., how she had once gone through an experience as thrilling as any that Twain had created for his fiction. During the Civil war Mrs. Fraser's husband was a brave southern sympathizer, and as he was a doctor he defied federal authorities in treating wounded Confederate soldiers. He finally was put in prison about the time that Gen. John McNeill was decided to suppress the southern sympathy and camped in Mrs. Fraser's front yard while he picked out ten prisoners of Confederate leanings to be "converted" to the Union.

Laws of New England

The children of the early days in New England did not learn the letters of the alphabet in such simple fashion as "A stands for Apple and B stands for Bull." But letters sometimes were used to mark the transgressor.

Lack of chastity was indicated in the scarlet A which flustered Prynn was. The drunkard could be and was disgraced, and must "wear about his neck and so as to hang above his outer garment a D made of red cloth and set upon white, and to continue it a year and not to leave it off when he comes among company."

The letter B did not escape being a mark of ignominy. "Any person who committed burglary by breaking up any dwelling house, or shall rob any person in the field or highway, such a person, so offending shall for the first offense be branded on the forehead with the letter B; a second time a second B, and for a third time be put to death. If the offense is committed on the Lord's Day, for the first offense he shall have one ear cut off; the second ear for the second offense, and be put to death for the third offense."

Smoking Among Women. Alarmed Men in 1868

In 1868 the growing practice of smoking and dipping snuff by refined women in both North and South was a source of alarm to the Saturday Evening Post, which was quoted by Schuyler Doughty in the April number of "The Galaxy" as shockingly on the increase.

In the South particularly, owing to the intense of the tobacco mania, "young and tenderly nurtured girls, belonging to the richest and proudest families in the neighborhood, smoked, to an extent that would be regarded as dangerously excessive even among men, and one cigarette or cigar or yet elegant little chibouks or nargiles, fashioned to suit their delicate lips, but short, black duds from the North and pipes of native invention made of a red stick stuck into a bowl of red earth or a cornucopia."

War Prisoners Made Slaves. All armies sent out from Rome were accompanied by speculators in the slave trade, who bought the captives as they were put up to auction after a battle and then undertook the transport to Rome of all who were suited for employment in Italy or were not brought up in the province which was the seat of war. Fowler says: "After the campaign of Pydna and the overthrow of the Macedonian kingdom, Aemilius Paullus, one of the most humane of the Romans, sold into slavery, under orders from the senate, 150,000 free inhabitants of communities in Epirus which sided with Perseus in the war."

Caesar, like Aemilius Paullus, one of the most humane of Romans, tells us himself that on a single occasion, the capture of the Aduatic, he sold 55,000 prisoners on the spot."

Dikes Long Employed. The dikes which protect the Netherlands and the German coast of the North sea go back to the old Roman times. Apparently even before the Romans appeared the Batavians at the mouth of the Rhine protected themselves by dikes. During the conquest of Holland, 10 B. C., built an elaborate system of artificial canals and dikes. Pliny the Elder gives an interesting description of the artificial hills which were erected as places of refuge during floods.

Wide Pronunciation Choice. There are 19 ways of pronouncing the name of Miami, if a record kept by two B. Joyner, Pathfinders, Magazine reader at Whitney, Fla., is to be relied upon. From bits of conversation overheard at recent tourists' gatherings in Florida's mecca, Mr. Joyner lists the following:

"Mi-a-mer, My-er-muh, Mi-amour, My-alm-ah, My-am-I, May-hammer, My-ammy, Me-ammer, Manner, Me-yammer, My-yamer, Me-ah-mah, My-am, Me-ammy, May-yammer and M'ammy."

Yes, Please. The little boy had been sent to the drug store to get some liniment and a special kind of china cement. "Do you want the two things in separate parcels?" asked the druggist, as soon as he had attended to the boy's demands.

"Yes, please," answered the little fellow. "I think it would be as well. The cement is for mother; she wants to mend a teapot. The liniment is for father. Mother broke the teapot over his head."

True to Form. An old actor-manager died, or at least his relatives thought he had died, and arrangements were made for the funeral.

On the appointed day one of his old colleagues arrived to pay his last respects, but to his astonishment, the would-be mourner was informed that "deceased" had come to life after a period of coma.

"Just like Bill," said the visitor; "he was always a terror for rehearsals."

Good Trick. Her heart reared like a frightened horse, writes an author in Woman's Home Companion. "We always thought," commented the crusty critic, "a long course of fiction reading had revealed every possible thing that a human heart could do, and here all the time it could stand up on its hind legs and we didn't know it."

Scarlet on the Bench. Scarlet was the "judicial color" throughout the Middle Ages, and those who sat on the bench who were entitled to sit as Judges in England during the Thirteenth and Fourteenth centuries wore robes of that hue.

Long Day in Far North. From May 13 to July 12 the sun never sets on the village of Hamme-fast, Norway, considered the northernmost town in the world. The inhabitants take advantage of the long day in making cod-liver oil and trading it for commodities from southern ports.

OMAR HOSKINS NAMED U. S. SCHOOL CADET

Local Boy Wins Appointment To Coast Guard Academy; 65 Win Honor

Omar Hoskins, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Hoskins of this city, has been appointed as cadet to the United States coast guard school at New London, Conn. He is the first cadet to be sent from Oregon to this school. He has been ordered to report to the academy August 15 by Rear Admiral Francis C. Billard, commandant of the coast guard. He will leave here Saturday and will go by the northern route. The appointment was made by Senator Steiwer.

Hoskins was one of 65 to be appointed to the academy. A number of Oregon boys took the examination but all failed to attain an eligible rating except Hoskins. Out of 1600 or more who took the examination only 74 successfully passed. Mathematics, physics and navigation spelled defeat for a large number of the candidates.

The academy course is three years and upon graduation the cadets are required to serve two years in the coast guard service. The school is ranked on a par with the United States naval academy at Annapolis and has an interchange of instructors with the naval school. Engineering, mathematics and navigation are featured at the coast guard school and recently an aeronautics branch was added. Cadets are also given two cruises for practical demonstration of coast guard work, one along the Atlantic coast and the West Indies and the other in European waters.

Hoskins has made a high scholastic record in high school, his grades being above average. He completed his sophomore year at the University of Oregon this spring and was listed on the honor roll as having no grade below a B. He was active in athletics in high school and played freshman football at Oregon. He is a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon, national social fraternity, and of Alpha Kappa Psi, national professional honorary fraternity for business administration students.

The coast guard service celebrated its 139th anniversary August 4.

Prizes for the contests will be given by merchants of this city and Eugene.

Two Autos Crash. An automobile driven by Ed Adams of this city was damaged early Tuesday morning when it was struck from the side by a car driven by Willard Moore, employed by J. H. Chambers & Son. A fence and running board on the Adams car were completely demolished. Mr. Adams was driving north in the intersection at Sixth and Washington and Moore, who was hurrying to catch the Chambers logging train, was traveling west on Washington.
