H. KNOX, and the following described real property, to-wit:

Few American Indians

It is questionable if, at the end of the fifteenth century, there were a quarter of a million Indians in what is now the United States.

Personality of the Thing

Science says 20 per cent of the people are mentally defective. But if you like them you don't mind.—Toledo Blade.

Thought for Today

Indians Outstrip Deer in Fleetness of Foot

The greatest runners in the world are the Tarahumara Indians, who have been known to continue 170 miles without stopping. A few years ago, Thomas Ziegler, a member of the Tarahumara tribe, ran a distance of 62½ miles on the highway from Pancho to Mexico City in 9 hours and 37 minutes without any evidence of fatigue. Translated, "Tarahumara" is foot runner. They are said to be insensible to heat and cold, using the same blankets summer and winter. They love to tell how their forefathers were the couriers of the Aztec monarchs. They day the Mexicans employ them to run wild horses into the corals. The Tarahumara prove the expression poets love to use, "Feet as a deer," to be true, for when they are on the chase they outstrip their untired deer. Running is not confined to the men of this tribe; the women enter into it with the same zest. As with the Zuni, there is much preparation for the sporting event. The priests practice many kinds of sorcery; human bones are hidden along the course, and woe to the runner whose foot uncovers one! The Each man taking part is rubbed down by the "shaman," or priest, to protect him against evil influences.

Old Custom of Telling Bees of Owner's Death

A reader in the United States sends me a clipping from an American newspaper telling how the late Dr. Charles James, chemist and mineralogist, owned 14 hives of bees, and how after his death one swarm disappeared and was found buzzing about the flowers on his grave more than two miles away. Peter Simple writes, in the London Post. Apparently, we are told, the bees had not been informed of his death in accordance with the ancient custom, which is still religiously fulfilled in country places.

Dealing in Stocks

A stock exchange, as generally understood, need not, necessarily, be a building where securities are bought and sold, but any place, even in the open air, as, for instance, "curb" stock exchanges. Securities are not upon the large stock exchanges, or new securities, which have not, as yet, been listed upon such exchanges, are handled in what is known as the curb market. The reason nowadays for the use of curb markets is the open rather than in some building is that, if the latter plan were pursued, there would exist another exchange and it would not be permissible for a member of the regular exchange to be in the curb market, as the curb market is frequently now is on the curb.

Compulsory Voting

In Belgium and Switzerland and some other European countries, voters are not only required to vote, but in Belgium for the first offense the culprit is at once called before a justice, who reprimands or fines him. The second offense is more severely punished and the name of the refractory citizen is published by the magistrate and posted on the gates of the town hall. The man who without excuse has absented himself from voting four times in ten years is considered unworthy and his name is placed on a list of the town hall. For ten years he is barred from holding any public office.

Russian "Break Fast"

The Russian fasts religiously when he religion forbids it, but immediately after the fasting period he plunges into an orgy of food. Elaborate preparations are made in advance for the break and tables are groaning under the weight of what has been during the fast. The menu includes: kory, goose, chicken, sausage, walnut cakes, cathedrals made of sour cream, laid kullich cakes, curd cakes, prokys, borth, bottles of kvass and champagne. The gathering surrounds this array of confections in a struggle unable to conquer it entirely.

Sleepy, but Not Hungry

Q. I. L. was spending the day with relatives, and had been warned by mother not to ask for anything except between meals. He did as he was told very satisfactorily until late in the afternoon, when he yielded to an inward desire for a "handout."

Not Loose Yet

Robert was facing the unpleasantness of an impending tussle on account of the fact that he had not yet been able to get a job. He was, when in trouble, wished for some one to keep him company. So he suggested that his little sister, Jave, age four, accompany him and have her tonsils removed also. "No, I won't," retorted little Jave, "because they aren't loose yet."

Uses for Sawdust

The sawdust of mahogany and rosewood is used in dressing fur, and that of some woods, such as the pencil cedar, yield perfumes.

Roman Faith in Power Conferred by Sardonys

The Romans, who greatly preferred precious stones which took little to engraving or carving, were devoted to the sard, in which they carved and wore the figures of Greek heroes and gods. Mars and Hercules they wore for courage and victory; Mercury for political success, and Venus for love. A sard around the neck, would allay pain, and give self-control, attract friends and insure conjugal happiness. Its power as a marriage charm is told in the jingle—

Wear sardonys, or for thee No conjugal felicity.

It was also claimed that this stone sharpened the wits of its wearer, making him fearless and victorious, so that in Rome it was very highly regarded as a talisman for lawyers. Fliny tells of an impetuous attorney who hired a sardonys ring to wear in court while defending a young widow. He won both his case and his client at the same time, thus greatly enhancing his belief in the power of his birthstone.

Faire Long Employed

The fair has its origin written in the dim pages of the past, and as an institution, although not the same as it is today, has long existed. "Although it is not known where the first fair was held, evidence points to the existence of fairs in western civilization as early as the dawn of the Christian era. There is evidence of fairs in eastern countries long before this, some historians pointing out that King Abner, held a six months' fair in the year 500 B. C., at which he showed the riches of his glorious kingdom. This is the first fair recorded in history. Others probably preceded this, however, as the scriptures record certain activities as fairs. In the Book of Ezekiel, twenty-seventh chapter, there are references to numerous fairs that were in existence at that time.

There is only one thing of which we are certain concerning fairs.

Row River Ramblings

(BY JACK HOWARD.)

Who should bob up in this community Tuesday but Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Hartley, and two sons of Elgin, eastern Oregon, for a surprise visit with Andrew Land, who happens to be an uncle of Mrs. Hartley. Mr. Land, who may well be classed as one of the mid-period pioneers of this section, has been holding down a rather lonesome job for many weeks as operator of the Demars mill pumping station on Harms creek, so the arrival of his relatives was not the only pleasure to him, for that furnished a good excuse to beg off the job for a few days to visit the coast with Mr. and Mrs. Hartley. The next morning Andrew ambled up the hill to get old Jack Howard to come down and do the gasoline engine cussin', for, said he, "I allow you aren't much of an engineer but I'm dead sure you can qualify for the cussin'." So the young folks and the old folks and the uncle and the great uncle are spending a few days listening to the stories told by the waves.

Crater Lake

Nature hollowed out the top of the ancient volcano, Mount Mazama, in Oregon, to make a setting in lava for a jewel-like lake of unbelievable blue. The spectacle of Crater Lake in the making can only be faintly imagined. Indian legends were a fantasy about it, and scientists explain it only by some gigantic cataclysm. The lake which gives its name to the national park is 2,000 feet deep in places. It has no inlet of any sort, nor is there any stream running out of it. The water is supposed to escape by underground channels and to reappear in the Klamath river a few miles away.

Sheriff Gets His Orders

Some strange communications come daily to the desk of a sheriff. The following one arrived recently from a woman in a small Washington city:

"Will you please go out and see how everything is in the house and how is the yard and front trees? Try all windows in basement, also, and let me hear about the place. I left a box in the pantry with dishes in and furniture in other rooms and left a list of all."—Portland Oregonian.

A Teaspoonful of honey or syrup, or one-eighth of a teaspoon of cream of tartar, added for each cup of sugar in a fudge frosting will often prevent a grainy texture.
