Wrong View of Death

We look at death through the cheap-glazed windows of the flesh, and believe him the monster which the cracked and flawed glass represents him.—Lowell.

Roger Bacon First to Talk of Metal Airship

In the all-metal airship we see realized an eighth-century-old Baconian project. In the Thirteenth century, says Domestic Air News, United States Department of Commerce, Roger Bacon, English philosopher and Franciscan friar, seems to have been the first to realize the principles of aerostation, if we discard Kircher and the legends.

Bacon wrote in glowing language on the possibility of constructing engines of immense size and power that could traverse the land and the water with great speed and carry with them persons and merchandise.

He proposed the construction of an aerial machine which "must be a large hollow globe of copper or other suitable material . . . filled with 'ethereal air or liquid fire' (some have claimed Bacon referred to rarefied air and hydrogen gas) and then launched from some elevated point into the atmosphere, where it will float like a vessel on the water."

There may be made, Bacon said, "flying machines so that a man sits in the midst of the machine revolving some engine by which artificial wings are made to beat the air like a flying bird."

The idea of the rigid airship may be traced from Bacon through Albertus de Saxonia (1350), Mendoza (1503-'75), Lana (1670), Gourdin (1783), Delcourt (1824), Monge (1843), Giffard (1855), Spiess (1873), Bausset (1888), Schwartz (1897) to Zeppelin (1900), all of whom proposed metal for the hull.

Old Customs Dear to Hearts of Britishers

The archbishop who lives at Lambeth palace is a very kind archbishop, the poor of the district will tell you. Every Thursday at the main gateway 30 half-crowns are distributed to 30 poor people of the parish. The custom is a very old one. Years ago it took another form. On Sundays, Tuesdays and Thursdays 15 quartern loaves of bread, 9 stone of beef (made into broth and served in pitchers) and 5 shillings' worth of halfpennies were the gifts. One is reminded of this and other quaint customs, surviving or revived, by the fact that the lord mayor of London revived the Boy Players a few weeks ago. They gave a performance at Salters' hall, the first since 1608, when they were the favorite players of Queen Elizabeth. The Salters' company is named after John Salter, who died in 1605. Formerly a service to his memory, held each year, took the form of a procession to his tomb, upon which each person knocked with a stick, and called three times in a loud voice: "How do you do, Brother Salter? I hope you are well."—London Mail.

Fight at First Sight

The "cichlids" of the fresh water carp family are said to be among the most ferocious of fish. They are quite difficult to mate and have to be kept separate, for they fight and kill each other with little delay. When they are once mated, however, they take great care of their progeny. A flower pot or hollow stone is found, which they clean spotlessly and in which they raise their family. They guard their eggs in alternate shifts, fanning them with their fins. Just before hatching, the female digs a pit in the sand or shingle and transfers the young fish to it. They are then a wriggling mass of black jelly. After two or three hours she digs another pit, and this process goes on till the youngsters can swim about.

Part Is Valuable

Euclid informs us that "the whole is greater than its parts," but then, the friend of our schooldays was not a photographer. Had the Master of Geometry lived later in the history of the world and been inclined to indulge in photography, his axiom might never have been formulated. Assuredly, in the great majority of cases this must be reversed by the would-be camera artist. Not only does a certain part of a negative often enlarge to form a much better composition than the whole—but in many cases the picture itself should be sought in a portion rather than in the whole.

Followed Flag's Example

"You says you was de only man ob de intire comp'ny what come out of de battle alibe? How com dat to happen, Mistah Johnsing?"

"Well, suh, Ah heerd dem bullets comin' tight smart aroun' me, but Ah kep' cool, an' when de cannon balls landed alongside of me Ah was still cool, you unerstan'. When Ah foun' dey was a-sending de gas ober, Ah wasn't sure about de virtue of mah rabbit's foot again dat newfangled stuff, and Ah kindah looks aroun'. Dere Ah sees de gran' ole flag a flyin', an'—well, suh, Ah just nacherly flew, too!"—Vancouver Province.

After Sedan

In his book, "Napoleon the Third," Mr. D'Auvergne gives an interesting picture of the meeting between the vanquished emperor and Wilhelm I of Prussia after Sedan. "The old king took the Frenchman's hand and said something about the fortunes of war having decided between them . . . with a friendly, encouraging gesture, Wilhelm of Hohenzollern gripped the broken monarch by the arm and led him into an inner room. They discussed the battle and the origins of the war . . . [illegible] cake [illegible] lies in ligh[illegible] of manipula[illegible]

Legal Enactments for Settling Public Lands

During the existence of the government under the Articles of Confederation, congress on September 6, 1780, passed a resolution recommending the survey and disposal by the several states of their waste and unappropriated lands to aid in paying the public debt incurred by the War of the Revolution. In the beginning these lands were regarded as an asset for the payment of this debt. The earliest efforts were to sell the land in large blocks and, prior to the organization of our present government, congress made three such sales. On June 15, 1785, congress under the Articles of Confederation passed a resolution forbidding settlement on the public domain. The act of March 3, 1807, prohibited such settlement under penalty of forfeiting any right or claim a settler may have, and the President was authorized to use civil and military force to remove such persons from the lands. Certain exceptions were made in favor of those who had settled there before the passage of the act, and later, for those who had settled before February 1, 1816, a privilege of temporary occupancy was given. From time to time acts were passed providing for the pre-emption rights within certain areas and subject to varying conditions.

Preserve Memories of Japanese Quake Dead

A method of preserving the names of 104,619 victims of the great earthquake of September 1, 1923, was perfected by Hidejiro Nagata, former mayor of Tokyo.

These names were sealed tightly in a special container and buried beneath a tower on the sacred Mount Koya, where generations of descendants may revere the memory of those who perished in the catastrophe.

Special paper was used to bear the names, 100 to the sheet. Rolled into scrolls, each sheet was metal bound at the center and ends and wound with black and white silk mourning ribbons. All the scrolls were placed in a special crystal jar a yard and a half in diameter and a foot high, made airtight to prevent decay. These were placed in a lead casing surrounded with a packing of carborundum as protection against deterioration.

Mount Koya, known to all true followers of Buddhism, is located in central Japan. Women, though they may climb it, are not allowed to go to the very top, this custom having been in force since time immemorial and still is being maintained on a few other sacred mountains.

And All but One Laughed

Speaking of the law reminds me of a story about a lawyer who was cross-examining a witness:

"You say the fence was about 14 feet high, and you were standing on the ground—not mounted on a ladder or anything."

"I do," responded the witness.

"In that case," said counsel, "perhaps you will be good enough to explain to the court how it was that you, a man of five feet four, could see what happened on the other side of a fence 14 feet high?"

"Certainly," chirped the witness, suavely. "There was a knot hole in the fence."—Kansas City Star.

Minimum Motion

A traveler from southern California tells me of a Mexican gambling game—familiar, perhaps, to many of you who may be interested in such matters—in which each player places on the table a lump of sugar, and the lump of sugar on which a fly first alights indicates the winner of the stakes, whatever they may be. A charmingly restful game, I should say, for the most part. And yet the exercise incidental to putting in and withdrawing the money must be somewhat fatiguing.—D. H. Talmadge in the Portland Oregonian.

Venerable Newspapers

Germany leads the world in the number of daily newspapers published continuously since the Seventeenth century. There are nine of these still in existence. The oldest is the Magdeburgische Zeitung, founded in 1626, and hence more than three hundred years old. The oldest daily in the United States is the Hartford Courant, which observed its one hundred sixty-fourth birthday. Germany also leads in the number of daily newspapers. It has 3,257 to the 2,272 in the United States. The population of Germany is just half that of the United States.

Odd Topic of Discussion

There is a story of the late Earl Rosebery which gains peculiar significance through his death. One night at dinner he was observed in deep conversation with his partner, paying no attention to any other member of the company. In the smoking room his host rallied him upon his undivided attention to the lady in question, suggesting that they must have found a topic of absorbing interest. "We did, indeed," replied Lord Rosebery, "we were considering what it must feel to be dead."

Easy to Be Critical

The habit of criticism grows upon us, because criticism is the easiest thing in the world. It does not take a thimbleful of brains to find fault, and the biggest numskull in the world can find fault with the greatest man in the world. We flatter ourselves that criticism is a sign of superior intelligence. It is not. It is usually a sign of bad manners, of lack of self-restraint, and of an entire ignorance of psychology.—Dr. Frank Crane.

Health Hint

Eggs when not fried but only slightly cooked form a valuable part of an older child's diet. However, children as young as six months may be given the yolk of a hard-boiled egg, provided it is grated very fine.

Eliminating Noise

Recent tests of ways to reduce impact noises in buildings have shown that such noises as arise from walking or vibration of machinery can be reduced by addition of a floating floor and a suspended ceiling.

'Round the Circle

(By JACK HOWARD.)

Taxpayers of road district No. 14 were in usual form Saturday and promptly voted down a proposed 2-mill special road tax. The vote was 11 in favor and 42 opposed. The measure was defeated not because the voters were opposed to good roads but rather by reason of lack of understanding, and some criticism was offered against the county court because it is not more explicit in wording special meeting notices, particularly as to the apportionment of special tax funds and approximate amount the county may have on hand to match the amount asked of the district. It appeared that if the special tax carried the levy would run up to something like $1600. It was understood that $1100 of this amount would be a general maintenance and repair fund to be used throughout the district, while the remainder, something like $500, would be used for oiling the road. Many contended that this amount would be insufficient to make any headway in the oiling program and if no other fund were available to go with it, it would be poor business procedure and, as the county court appeared to be reticent as to the availability of other funds to carry on the oiling program, it was right and proper to follow the tradition of road district No. 14 and, when in doubt, vote no.

* * *

The fine old face of that old pioneer of south Lane county, Bill Landess, was in evidence at the road meeting at Dorena Saturday afternoon. Notwithstanding that Mr. Landess' home is in road district 14, he is more closely identified with and interested in Cottage Grove, where he has been a familiar street figure for years and years and at times something of a manipulator in affairs of municipal and county government. In the olden days—in the days of the "wets" and in the days of political party primaries and county conventions—Bill Landess was a power unto himself, his hat always in the republican ring. He has always been something of a political philosopher, and that philosophy is invariably couched in such original good natured language as to carry material weight and leave a bad taste with a political antagonist. The writer claims social and political acquaintance with Mr. Landess covering a period of two and a half decades; and that harks back to the days when the humble little primaries were the base to which all who aspired to political greatness clung; but to as much as cling it was necessary to get within clinging distance, and it was then that such men as plain Bill Landess had to be reckoned with. Ah, yes, many a so-called statesman, as well as some good-sized politicians, came down the line to flirt with Bill Landess. If Bill liked 'em and believed in 'em, he would support 'em, and that didn't mean maybe, for, say what you please about this old political war horse, he was always true to his word, and more times than not he delivered the goods. Bill is so common and unassuming that one just can't help liking him. It is not known that he ever laid claim to oratorical ability and so his appearances before aggregations in numbers large are limited; but boy, oh, boy! when Bill gets you comfortably seated on the edge of some old back street sidewalk, where he can have a foot and a half drop for his feet, with a soft stick in one hand and his faithful old jacknife in the other, woe to a political aspirant not in his favor. The other day at the road meeting Mr. Landess addressed the chair in an effort to make some point in the procedure plain from his way of thinking. He was not quite satisfied with his own explanation and wound up his talk with the plain statement that "I've got a lot to say, but can't say it." Of course he came in for a good bit of joshing, for every one wanted to know, if, in the event that $500 was voted for oiling the road, it was to be used in front of his home, which is a cat-throw from the limits of Cottage Grove, where the west terminal of road district No. 14 runs headon into the east terminal of east Main street.

Andrew Land, accompanied by his relatives, Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Hartley and two sons from Elgin, eastern Oregon, have returned from a week's visit at Bandon. Mr. Land is past his three score years and ten and has lived in this vicinity almost in sound of ocean wave for many years, but this was his first visit to the coast.

* * *

The agitation for a gymnasium for the high school at Dorena appears to be growing and, while sentiment was about evenly divided at a recent informal meeting, it is said there is now a more favorable view. It is understood that the proposal will come up at an official meeting to be held the latter part of this month.
