Meat Made Tender by Juice of Tropical Tree

The toughest beefsteak may be rendered as tender and delicious as the choicest porterhouse if one will carry with him wherever he dines a bottle of papaw tree juice and rub it on his meat. The papaw is a peculiar tree of southern South America and other tropical regions where the natives use its juice in this way to improve their meat. It also has a number of other peculiarities, says a bulletin issued by the Field Museum of Natural History, Chicago.

The papaws are definitely divided into two sexes, with distinct characteristics, whereas in most plants and trees each individual is equipped to reproduce itself alone, possessing both the male and female organs. Among the papaws, of which there are some twenty-seven species, the male and female flowers are produced on separate trees, the male flowers occurring in long scattered racemes, and the female ones in short, small bundles. Another peculiarity of the papaw is that the juice of the plants contains fibrin, a substance which so far as known exists elsewhere only in animal flesh. This, however, can not be regarded as establishing a link between the animal and vegetable kingdoms in the chain of evolution, botanists declare.

Delve Into Secrets of Island of Madagascar

A great deal of mystery surrounds the picturesque island of Madagascar. It appears to be the lumber room of an old continent, but which, or perhaps better, where is the continent, asks a correspondent: "Some think that Madagascar has broken away from its mother continent, Africa; others that it is one of the relics of a hypothetical continent, 'Lemuria,' which existed long ago in the Indian ocean between Africa and India." This is not, as the casual reader might think, a passage from some romance of the lost lands of the world. It is merely an extract from an official document, circulated by the British museum to call attention to the fact that an expedition is now at work in Madagascar seeking the solution of some of its riddles. It is not, then, beyond the bounds of possibility that the scientists may yet send the world authentic tidings of a lost continent.

The Culprit

"My dear," remarked Mr. Pitt, as he sat at breakfast one morning, "I think there was a burglar in the house last night."

"Why do you think that?" asked his loving wife.

"Well," said he, "I left a lot of money in my pocket before I went to bed last night, but there's none there now."

"That's your own fault," she replied snappily. "You should have got up and shot the person. If you hadn't been so stupid and cowardly, you wouldn't have lost your money."

"Yes, perhaps you're right, my dear; but then I didn't want to be a widower."—London Weekly Telegraph.

Looking Backward

There were some strange peoples in prehistoric Kentucky. Scientists in digging deep in Kentucky soil are said to have discovered evidence of two distinct groups of human beings existing in different ages and at different levels. One race buried its dead in stone chambers whilst another had granite altars for human sacrifice and burned the dead in pits of molten lava. At any rate they seem to have had means of making fire, although they were 10,000 years before cigar lighters were introduced. This is a damned sight older country than we think and men with shovels turn up many surprises.—Los Angeles Times.

It Hurt

Ellen Terry, to everybody's surprise, left $100,000. A New York actress was talking about her.

"Her wit was sharp," the actress said. "Sometimes it was too sharp."

"She and I and three or four other actresses were standing behind the scenes at a benefit in a Broadway theater one afternoon. A young and pretty actress said uncertainly: 'I don't think I'll sing, after all. I'm sure they don't expect me.'

"Indeed they do expect you, darling," said Ellen Terry. "Don't you see them all leaving?"

Solved

Four-year-old Bobby, perched on his father's knee in the crowded bus, looked dead at the stout, gaudily dressed woman as she bustled in, sniffed contemptuously, and wedged herself into the only seat left.

Then he turned to his mother. "Mum," he said, loudly, "it's a lady."

"Hush, Bobby, dear," mother checked him; "we know."

"But, mummy," Bobby was puzzled—"you just said to dad, 'Whatever this object comin' in?'"

Parrot's Comment Apt

A doctor was giving a dinner party. His favorite parrot was in the room concealed by some curtains.

During the meal one of the guests, a woman, was exceedingly foolish, and talked for several minutes without cessation.

When at last silence reigned, a neighbor at the next table, behind the curtains, "Let me see your tongue, please."
