WISHES YOU A VERY HAPPY AND PROSPEROUS
NEW YEAR

JESUS, FRIEND OF SINNERS.
He reproaches those who do not repent. Read Matt. 11:20-24. These cities, where he did most of his work, would have been saved had they repented. We have more light than they—shall we turn from sin to Jesus and claim him as our friend? Now is the time, not tomorrow. Procrastination is the thief of souls.

Camouflaging the Christmas leftovers.

It is all over—the hurried, hectic, happiness of Christmas and down we go to the depths of despair as we begin to total the statements of the butcher, the baker, the candlestick-maker. Oh, oh, could turkey for all of us—leftovers from the feast!

But a bit of imagination and fresh green parsley can change the most formidable array of left overs into food for the gods—and wuthunda!—beside appeasing the wrath of the vegetable gods.

Leftover fruit plus gelatine and molded in fancy little molds makes the most delightful of fruit salads—which incidentally may do double duty as a salad-dessert course. Bits of vegetable may be treated in the same way; chilled and served on crisp lettuce leaves, gelatin-base salads make any meal more than just another dinner. We like to serve tiny sandwiches, with salads—sorta dresses up the course you know.

Leftover turkey or chicken? Shapely brown croquettes, use most toothsome of little "squat pies." Sandwiches—two or three crackers—topped usually; creamed fowl with bits of vegetables or a can of peas and pimento strips by way of extenders and served in a ring of rice, noodles, spaghetti or leftover mashed potatoes. Brunswick stew—adding the left-over chicken—lima beans, corn, okra and often tomatoes—is a delectable dish. Just what we ask you, should the family face turkey hash three meals a day, is a new recipe, or delightful way to camouflage the "remains" of the Christmas scenery?

Meats offer even more possibilities; green vegetables may be freshened by heating through in rapidly boiling water. Others take on a new allurements, —in sauce plain or with cheese. Au gratin dishes—either in casserole or individual remekins—utilize leftover cauliflower, cabbage, potatoes and the like. Changing the appearance does add allurements, —oh —you know how even a few pounds off and the dress for snaky hips brings back the fading lighthead—and still you're the same girl!

Leftover cranberry sauce may be converted into cranberry jelly, molded and served from time to time. If turned into sterilized glasses, and parafined it will naturally keep longer. It may also be used in a molded cranberry celery nut salad recipe, dependent largely from your own imagination.

Celery—the "remains" after removing the favored heart—may be cooked and served in a cheese sauce made into a souffle, or chilled and served in vegetable salads.

Serving of fruit cake—it may be steamed by placing a square or several slices of it in a coffee can or

"What is their name?"

"Why, their name is Nest," said Nancy.
