First Washing Machine Got Inventor "In Bad"

Therrell K. Halsin of Glory, Mary land, who is credited by Country Home with being the first man to experiment with a washing machine, occupies no place in the ranks of men who emancipated women and lightened their burdens. Entirely to the contrary, Therrell was the womanly scorn that by his interference with the sacred Monday morning washday rites, that at the age of sixty he had to leave his home forever under the suspicion of being not quite mentally sound.

The would-be inventor, says the article, had such an aversion to toiling, and wash day brought him particularly keen pangs, that he took a discarded butter churn, filled it with water, soap and several pairs of overalls and induced a colored man named Benjamin to operate it.

The idea was superb, the execution all wrong. The overalls and churn were wrecked in no time at all and there was such a furor about it that Therrell moved out. "Go ahead and put your hands on my dear derelict washboard," he said in parting. "I ain't saying you can't get clothes clean on a washboard, but one of these days you're going to have washing machines and then you'll think of me."

Little Mary Knew All About Social Workers

Karl de Schweinitz, general secretary of the Family society, tells of a social worker who recently took Sammy and Mary, aged ten and six, respectively, to her home to a hospital clinic for examination.

It was the first automobile ride for both the children—and Sammy could not restrain himself. He could not see everything that passed, including street cars, people, and even vacant lots. Kiddie-like, he had to stand up and lean far out the car window.

The social worker repeatedly told him to sit down—but he was so young. Finally, in desperation, she said: "Sammy, if you don't sit down I'll never take you for another ride in my car."

But little Mary knew better than her older brother and she scornfully corrected him. "Don't you know, Sammy, that Miss X— doesn't have any children—she only has an office!"—Philadelphia Record.

Inventor of Piano

Bartolomeo Cristofori was an Italian harpsichord maker and the inventor of the hammer action used in the modern pianoforte.

No great amount is known of his career. He was born in Padua about 1655, and early served an apprenticeship as an instrument maker. After following that work for some years in Padua he began to be known elsewhere. About 1687 Duke Cosimo III, persuaded him to remove to Florence.

It was during the Florentine period that he made his first pianos. Descriptions and engravings of the first instruments he made are correctly ascribed to him. A grand pianoforte by Cristofori is said still to be preserved in Florence. He died in that city in 1731.

Early Saxon Cemetery

The discovery of more than forty skeletons on the "Hog Back," near Guilford, England, has revealed that there was once a large Saxon settlement there. It was thought, when first the skeletons were unearthed, that they were the remains of malefactors hanged on the gibbet which once stood there, but further excavations resulted in finds of great interest, including a perfectly preserved drinking vessel and a spearhead and ferrule. From these British museum authorities are able to place the date of burial somewhere between 600 and 650 A. D. Among the skeletons are some of very large men, several measuring over six feet.

My Lady Nicotine

My Lady Nicotine was named after a gentleman—Jean Nicotin of Nimes. He served as French ambassador at Lisbon under Francis II, and while there he fell in with a Flemish merchant who gave him some seeds of the tobacco plant.

Portuguese adventurers had brought the seeds from South America. Nicot carried them back to France in 1559, and his countrymen, after experiencing the pleasures of indulgence in the crushed leaves of the plants which grew from them, conferred upon the plant the name of the ambassador. Hence to this day, botanically, it is Nicotiana, and its active principle is known as Nicotine.

Not Slang Phrase

Does "galore" sound like slang? Does it radiate Wild West American, cowboy lingo or rustic originality? Maybe so, but if it is so, it's all wrong.

For "galore," meaning "in abundance," has been borrowed practically bodily from the Irish "go loor," in which language it has a sense identical with that which it enjoys in English.—Kansas City Star.

Grandfather Vindicated

Banjo clocks, just like our grandfathers used to wind, are among the latest favorites in furniture despite the hundreds of types of modern clocks on the market.—Country Club.

Latter in the Minority

The human species, according to the best theory I can form of it, is composed of two distinct races, the men who have brown and the men who have white skin.—Charles Lamb (1775-1834).
