HISTORY'S MYSTERIES

Unsolved Riddles That Still Puzzle Authorities Here and Abroad

The Wandering Jew

THERE is little mystery to the story of the "Wandering Jew," so far as the personage himself is concerned, but there is a deep and as yet unsolved mystery about the origin of this legend, dealing, according to the Jewish encyclopedia, with a shoemaker who, taunting Jesus on the road to Golgotha, was told by him to "Go on forever till I return"—or, according to the more popular version, "Tarry thou till I come."

No one seems to know just how this story started. So far as can be learned, the legend first appeared in a pamphlet of four leaves printed at Leyden in 1602 by Christoff Crutzer, but no printer of that name has ever been located, and the real place and printer cannot now be ascertained. The legend spread quickly throughout Germany, no less than six different editions of the pamphlet appearing during the year 1602 and forty were extant in Germany before the end of the Eighteenth century, while the story made its way into England in 1625, and other European countries about the same time, eventually forming the basis of a number of novels and other imaginative works based upon the same idea.

According to Bebauer, one of the recognized authorities upon subjects of this kind, the legend is founded on the words given in Matthew 6:28, which are quoted in the earliest German pamphlets of 1602. Another version of the legend declares that the attendant Malchus, whose ear was cut off by Peter in the Garden of Gethsemane, was condemned to wander over the face of the earth until the second coming of Christ.

The action of Malchus is associated by several biblical commentators with the scoffing at Jesus and an actual predecessor of the wandering Jew is recorded in the "Flores Historiarum," by Roger of Wendover, in 1828. Here it is stated that an Armenian bishop, then visiting in England, was asked by the monks of St. Albans about the celebrated Joseph of Arimathea, who had spoken to Jesus and who was popularly supposed still to be alive. The archbishop declared that he had himself seen him in Armenia and that his name was Cartaphilus.

Moncure D. Conway attempts to connect the legend with those of other "immortals"—King Arthur, Frederick Barbarossa, Don Sebastian of Portugal, Thomas the Rhymer and even Rip Van Winkle, claiming that all are founded on the same belief in the immortality of certain prominent personages, some of which are notable for their praiseworthy exploits and others for crimes which they must expiate by centuries of bodily suffering.

Numbers of persons have presented themselves as the "Wandering Jew" and have gathered varying numbers of believers in their statements during the past three centuries—the most notable of these being Count Cagliostro, the Italian imposter who stopped at nothing in order to attain his ends. In 1542 a man appeared in Hamburg, Germany, who declared that he had been present during the passion of Christ and that since that time he had wandered through many countries and over many lands, as a penance for his voluntary participation in the dragging of Jesus before Pilate.

Another man representing himself as the same character, appeared in the Netherlands in 1575, arriving at Strassburg a few years later and, presenting himself before the magistrates, informed them that he had visited their two cities two centuries before, which is said to be proved to be true by "reference to the registers of the town, wherein the stranger pointed out an entry about himself and also called attention to names which he mentioned before they were shown to him."

The "Wandering Jew" was next heard of in the West Indies and, in 1604, he made his appearance in France, where he caused a considerable sensation. On April 22, 1774, the Wanderer, or an individual who impersonated him, appeared in Brussels under the name of Isaac Laquedem and only a few years ago another claimant to the title made himself known in central Germany—but not one of these surrounded himself with the atmosphere and apparent sincerity of Cagliostro, a confessed imposter, who had so grounded himself in history and languages as to be able to speak with apparent authority about every event of importance which had taken place since the beginning of the Christian era.

A Bunch of Sheep On Every Farm

By Edgar W. Cooley

Agricultural Extension Department International Harvester Company.

In good farming allow nothing to go to waste.

On many farms every year grass and weeds around buildings, in barn lots, along fences and roads, in corn or stubble fields, go to seed and become waste material. These weeds could be turned to good account if there was a bunch of sheep to eat them.

No farm animal will respond more readily to care and feed than sheep. They need but little attention if such as they require is given at the right time.

There should be sheep on every farm.

Sheep need a change of pasture. Turning them from one field into another furnishes this change and keeps the sheep healthy.

Expensive housing is unnecessary. Warm shelter is essential only when the lambs are young. The roof is the important part of the sheep house. Keep the sheep dry during the winter season and the fleece will provide the warmth. A bunch of good ewes will return good profits. Their requirements are simple and their returns in fleece and fat lambs will surprise you.

There is no better winter feed for the ewes than good silage and alfalfa hay. A good ewe will give more milk for the feed consumed than will the best dairy cow. Her lamb will do the milking and by converting the milk into fat lamb, the farmer can get much more per one hundred pounds for the ewe's milk than for the cow's, and in addition, the ewe furnishes a fleece each year to sell.

Care should be taken not to feed sour or moldy silage to sheep. It will kill them. Large ewes raising lambs can be fed sweet silage up to four or five pounds per day, after they have become accustomed to it. During the winter before the lambs arrive, the ewes, if in good condition at the start, need only a light silage ration with alfalfa hay and corn fodder. Sometimes a feed of bright straw is relished by the ewes.

Sheep kept in muddy yards for long periods are almost sure to get sore feet. Give them dry footing and there will be no trouble.

Select a bunch of rugged "mutton-shaped" ewes and mate them in the fall with a purebred sire of good form and fleece. Have the lambs born in March if there is plenty of good feed for the ewes and warm shelter for the lambs. Otherwise the lambs had better not arrive until later when the weather is warmer and the ewes can get some grass to increase their flow of milk.

Some farmers have the lambs born in January or February and fatten them for earlier markets. This necessitates much care, abundant feed and warm shelter, but it is profitable business when well managed.

When the lambs are ten days old they will begin eating grain and hay. Fix a creep for them so they can have a trough apart from their mothers, give them some wheat bran and cracked corn and continue to feed them all they will eat while on pasture, if they are to be fattened and sold when three or four months old. The best time to sell the lambs is before they are one year old.

Some good farmers allow the ewes and lambs to graze during the summer with little or no grain, wean the lambs in August and turn them into a standing corn. There is no place where a lamb will fatten faster than in a cornfield eating grass and weeds and weed seeds and the lower blades of corn.

Lambs should not be kept on old pastures that have been grazed by older sheep. There is danger of stomach worms. However, if tobacco dust or stems are kept before the sheep at all times, they will not be troubled with internal parasites.

Three hundred farmers' reports give $3.69 as the average cost for keeping a ewe and lamb as against $10.15 as the average return for the wool and lamb.

Nearly all good sheepmen keep a few of the best ewes each year to add to the ewe flock and take the place of the older and discarded ewes.

'Round the Circle

(By JACK HOWARD.)

Nothwithstanding the somewhat depleted condition of the lumber market the Garoutte & Hastings Lumber company mill on Row river is operating on practically full time

• • •

Andrew Land, one of the bullwhackers of the good old sawmill days has charge of fire hazards at the Garoutte & Hastings Lumber company mill this season. He probably is one of the last living drivers of a bull logging team in this section. For a number of years 25 years ago he did the "cussin'" and manipulated the goad stick at the old Doolittle mill, the site of which was north of the Lowry England ranch, in the circle of the east ridge of old Cerro Gordo mountain which leads back into hundreds of virgin acres covered with millions of feet of mighty fir and cedar.

John Teeters and Mrs. Teeters and the children, who hail from the banks of the classic Santiam, not far removed from Mehama, where John has for a number of years held a sawmill position, have returned home after a few days' visit with Mr. Teeters' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Teeters, Dorena. About the first question John asked the "old man" 'tother day was: "How's your wife's lady slippers coming on?" "Fine," said the other, "and how's yours?"

Then John grinned again and said: "Fine—never lost one of 'em." It was in the early spring that Mr. Teeters was up here and, being a lover of the native flora of Oregon, just couldn't resist the temptation to scout around a bit and gather in a few of the wild lady slipper bulbs, now getting scarce. He found a few and took them home with him, tenderly nursed them and has been rewarded by a vigorous growth. Coming in from his hunt he stopped at the Howard ranch, where he was shown a small but rather pleasing collection of a variety of wild things, among them a number of lady slippers carefully cared for, in the cluster of which, surrounded by the delicate satin white slippers was to be seen a beautiful yellow one, a product of the woodlands of eastern Iowa. Do you think John has for a single, blessed minute forgotten the sight of that—not on your young life. Talking about flowers, a fellow said to the writer not so very long ago, "Say, when you see a man deeply interested in flowers, particularly wild flowers, you can lay your New York stock exchange winnings that he isn't a bad fellow to tie to."

A letter from Mel McKibben, who with his family left his ranch here and journed to Arvada, Wyo., where he contemplates permanent location, announces their arrival by car, an enjoyable trip and a steadying down to the business in hand. He mentions Wyoming crops as being in good condition.

Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Howard of Corvallis visited the last of last week and the first of this with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Howard north of Dorena. Young "Jack"—He isn't so dern young "no mo" either—is a bus driver with daily run from Corvallis to Portland, and this is his first vacation, barring an occasional day off, during a period of three years.

Grant Bales is home on his ranch up Harms creek for the time being, after a several months' steady grind on the bucking grounds of the W. A. Woodard Lumber company logging region. It is understood that logging operations may again open at the camp the latter part of June or early in July.

Leo Wilson, edgerman for the Garoutte & Hastings Lumber company, had a slight mishap to one of his fingers last Thursday. He caught it between a moving timber and one that wouldn't move. Following a sleepless night or two, he's back on the job.

There will be a husky youngster one of these eventful days undoubtedly following in the footsteps of his illustrious dad, going about the sawmill districts who will tell you, should you happen to ask him, that "I was born at the Garoutte & Hastings Lumber company mill on Row river, address Cottage Grove, Disston route" He was a gift of Nature to Mr. and Mrs. George Nichols June 8 in the year of depressed lumber market conditions, 1930. When he stepped into the ring he weighed 11 pounds stripped for action and "rarin' to go."

Carving Is Hobby Of Evangelist Bulgin

Dr. J. E. Bulgin, who has been conducting evangelistic meetings here for two weeks, spends a considerable portion of his spare time carving designs in wood. He found that, following the tragic death of his son eight years ago, he had to have something to keep his mind employed at all times, and he took up carving as a hobby. He had with him while here a large frame constructed of North Carolina white oak and Australian fiddleback. The frame surrounded an inscription from the bible, the letters of which had been sawed from white holly from Palestine.

Dr. Bulgin was delighted with the Cottage Grove country. This was his first visit but he expressed a wish to return often.

MOUNTAIN STATES MOVES FOR BENEFIT OF FARMER

In order to extend present power lines to serve as many rural districts as possible and give the farmer the same service as the city customer, the Mountain States Power company has announced a new extension policy to go into effect at once. This new policy provides for a considerable additional investment on the part of the power company to serve new customers and is based upon the estimated annual revenue. Under the new schedule the company will spend three times the amount of the estimated annual revenue for line construction, transformer equipment, etc., to serve new customers in the rural districts. This is a substantial increase over the former extension policy.
