Come Into the Kitchen

Ella M. Lehr.

Cooking by Mathematics.

Good morning, homemakers!

Do you cook by mathematics or do you still follow the age-old method of cooking by calisthenics?

You know what I mean—sink to range, range to cabinet, and back to the range again, to take the steenth dozen peek at the chocolate soufflé, with a prayer that it retain its shapely figure and not resemble a bath sponge when it is bitten into. Why—we daily run the marathon—even if half acre kitchens are quite out of style—and then aren't his little permanent youth.

Time and temperature cookery is now the modern culinary realm. Our grandmothers and those before them must have had a severe sense for finding out when an oven was moderate, quick and otherwise—probably suffering from scorched fingers and par-boiled cheeks as a result of their methods of testing. It is rumored that in the old days some poor servant putting his head into the oven, often with a scorching interior, and the length of time for baking was measured by the time in which you would repeat the "Miserere" slowly or the time of saying an "Ave Maria" or the "Pater Noster"—intimating a closer acquaintance with formal prayer than exists today!

For those of you who cook by mathematics—as I call it—referring to the use of the oven temperature control on the modern cooking appliances perhaps this will help you: The Oven—used for fruit cakes, puddings and breads steamed in the oven, 250-275 degrees.

Moderately slow oven—used for custards, baked beans, some oven dinners, slow cooking of meats, 300-325 degrees.

Moderate oven—used for cakes, quick loaf breads, some cookies, roasting of meats, after searing, 350-375 degrees.

Quick oven, muffins, cookies, baked apples, baked potatoes, etc., 400-425 degrees.

Hot oven—biscuits, searing meats, pastry shells, etc., 450-500 degrees.

Lacking an oven temperature control—which is truly the "open sesame" to a woman's outside world—an oven thermometer placed toward the center front on the lower rack of your oven—enables one to get a fairly accurate check on the oven heat, though it is then necessary to regulate the gas or electricity flow. The control is a silent servant—which once set keeps the temperature at the exact point with no watching whatever.

One of the best "wife savers" we know is this one-piece meal:

Ham Casserole.

Half fill a butter casserole with raw potato chips or cubes. Sprinkle with one teaspoon thinly chopped onion. Then place on top a thick slice of ham, with halves of apples arranged over the top of that. In the hollow of each apple half, place a teaspoon of brown sugar. Bake covered at 350 degrees for one and one-half hours or 400 degrees for one hour. Garnish with parsley. Pork chops or a slice of pork steak may be used. In that instance add salt and pepper.
