Sacred Chinese Temple

Taken Over by Bandits

Mount Lushan, one of the twelve sacred mountains of China, famed alike for the piety of its monks and for the beauty of its scenery, has been entirely pre-empted by bandits. The once sacred grove, formerly given over to the contemplation of immense carved images of Buddha, or to the rites of Taoist priests, are now used as prisons. Ancient Chinese writings declare that Mount Lushan was "30 miles high and 240 miles in circumference."

Today Lushan rises only a little more than 4,000 feet, but it affords an unsurpassed view southward over the gulf of Pechili and eastward toward the Liaoting peninsula, on which the Russians built Port Arthur and on which the Japanese now occupy Dairen. Lushan is very rugged, and in olden times every cliff was crisscrossed with a temple. Yehliu, the famous Chitan who rose to power under Genghis Khan, was an especial devotee of Lushan and legends have it that he selected this mountain to be "the eternal trustee of wisdom." Accordingly he is supposed to have buried 10,000 sacred books in a cavern under the peak of the mountain, and then to have erected over his repository the temple which today is a bleak ruin.

Old English Custom of Wassailing Apple Trees

During the month of January, Somerset (England) farmers participate in the time-honored custom of "wassailing" the apple trees so as to insure a bumper apple crop. The ceremony takes place at night by the flickering and uncertain light of a lantern. The villagers gather to each orchard in turn, round the largest apple trees they can find. A bucket of cider accompanies them, in which a small piece of toast is dipped and placed in the branches. Then an old chant is sung, starting: "Old apple-tree, old apple-tree, we come to wassail thee." This song concludes with an exhortation to the trees to:

Grow apples now;
Make full, cap full, three bushel bays full,
Make them so full, and a little bays full, under the star.

Then guns are fired and the villagers drink the health of the trees in cider. It is a quaint custom, and has been kept up for centuries.

These radicals were really included in the Liberal political group of the day, the radicals being those members with more advanced ideas.

Henry Hunt and others who were in favor of radical reforms enjoyed the distinction or obloquy of being the first to be termed "radicals," the name being applied to them in 1818.—Kansas City Star.

An Afterthought
Illustrating his contention that the modern actor is too apt altogether to suppose that he is in some way above the audience, H. B. Irving, son of Henry Irving, and himself a fine Hamlet—used to tell, as a great joke against himself, how he had been in the box office of his own theater when a clergyman from the country came in to buy a couple of tickets for a performance of "Hamlet." Having secured his seats the clergyman started to go, but as an afterthought he came back.

"By the way," said he, greatly to the amusement of Irving, "who is playing the part of Hamlet?"—Kansas City Times.

Great Church Organization
The Federal Council of Churches held its first meeting at Philadelphia, 1908, when it was organized. Thirty denominations were united by this act for the purpose of enabling churches to do together what they could not hope to do alone; to express the fellowship and unity of the Christian church; to unite the Christian bodies of America into service for Christ in the world; to encourage devotional fellowship and mutual counsel, and to secure a larger combined interest for the churches of Christ in all matters affecting the moral and social condition of the people and the world at large.

Volcanic Alaskan Valley
The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes is a volcanic region in Alaska, which came into being at the time of the eruption of Mount Katmai, June 8, 1912. It and its neighboring wonders were discovered by Robert F. Griggs, director of the National Geographic society expedition, from 1915 to 1919. This region proved to be such a stupendous volcanic laboratory, as well as being so rich in scenic value, that in September, 1918, President Wilson set aside the whole district, comprising more than 1,000,000 acres, as the Katmai National monument.

Discovery on Cyprus
A Greek temple of the Sixth century, B. C., with 50 life-size statues, was found on the island of Cyprus, in the Mediterranean by the Swedish professor, Einar Gjerstad and his associates. In the remains of the excavated palace of Foni of the same island, dating from the Fifth century before Christ, Professor Gjerstad found a room to which water was led in three conduits and then led to heat the bedrooms on the second floor with steam. The results of his researches show that Cyprus was colonized by the Mycenaean Greeks about 1200 B. C.

Always Merry and Bright
A certain club has replaced its familiar black-coated servitors with young, and sometimes pretty, waitresses. One of the old die-hard members who had strongly opposed the idea dropped in to lunch one day.

"How's the duck today?" he growled, glowering at the girl who came to serve him.
"Oh, I'm all right," said the waitress, perkily. "How are you, sir?"—Brooklyn Eagle.

Running Away
Many explorers, so highly praised for braving jungle heat and ice floes are really "escapists" who have found these physical pains easier to endure than the emotional stress of staying at home and getting along with their wives and brothers and neighbors.—Country Home.

Solar Surgery
From the earliest time sunlight has been considered an important aid in the preservation of health. The ancient Greeks and Romans exposed their naked bodies to the sun in the open air to recruit mental and physical energy. Exposure to the sun's rays was also adopted by the physicians of those times as a remedy for many afflictions, "especially dropsy, inflammation of the kidneys and paralysis."

Another Reminder
The poor think that if they had wealth they would be happy; the rich know differently, for with more cares, there is less happiness.—Woman's Home Companion.

New York Has Largest of World's Carillons

The most famous carillon in the world is the St. Rombold's carillon of 45 bells at Malines, in Belgium. The belfry at Bruges has 47 bells, a like number sound from Antwerp's cathedral spire. In the belfry at Mons are 44 bells and from the belfry at Ghent 52 bells still ring even as they did when the treaty of peace between the United States and Great Britain was signed on Christmas Eve, 1814. At Amsterdam, the Netherlands, and also at Middleburg, Delft, Utrecht, The Hague, Groningen and at Arnhem, famous carillons are found. Patriotic Americans have placed upon the Louvain (Belgium) library a carillon of 48 bells. In Canada there are five modern carillons, including Simcoe of 23 bells, Guelph of 23 bells, Toronto university of 23 bells, Toronto Metropolitan church of 23 bells and Ottawa of 53 bells, this last carillon being placed in the tower of the Parliament house. In the United States there are approximately 30 carillons. The most important of these are at New York, a carillon of 63 bells, the gift of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., in memory of his mother; at Cohasset, 51 bells; at Mountain Lake, Pa., 99 bells; Chicago, 43 bells; Germantown, Pa., 48 bells; Cranbrook, Mich., 45 bells; Gloucester, Mass., 31 bells; Birmingham, Ala., 25 bells; Detroit, Mich., 28 bells; Princeton University, 37 bells; Merceburg, Pa., 43 bells; Morristown, N. J., 35 bells; Albany, N. Y., 60 bells; Norwood, Mass., 50 bells; Plimfield, N. J., 23 bells; Cincinnati, Ohio, 23 bells; Springfield, Mass., 47 bells; Indianapolis, Ind., 60 bells, and Rochester, Minn., the Mayo clinic, 23 bells.

"Radical," Term Applied to Advanced Liberals

At the mention of the "radical" there is immediately conjured up in the mind thoughts of Communists, Bolshevists or other revolutionary group whose ideas run counter to those of law-abiding citizens.

That radicalism, however, is not a modern excrescence is known to all who have studied the movement. The older radicals being those of the world's present political sense, constituted an English party, active early in the Nineteenth century.

These radicals were really included in the Liberal political group of the day, the radicals being those members with more advanced ideas.

Henry Hunt and others who were in favor of radical reforms enjoyed the distinction or obloquy of being the first to be termed "radicals," the name being applied to them in 1818.—Kansas City Star.

Back of Sound Investments

Behind high-grade bonds is actual security—factories, railroad property, office buildings, hotels, or the taxation of a municipality. The bond buyer is amply protected no matter what happens, providing he owns a sound investment. It is difficult for the average person to select good investments—he must rely upon a bank or investment dealer. The Bank of Cottage Grove is glad to consult with the people of Cottage Grove concerning their investments. It is very conservative in selling or recommending bonds, as it realizes that its own reputation, as well as the customers' money, is at stake.
