Measurements of Time by Old Water-Clocks

An early means adopted for the measurement of short periods of time was by noting the quantity of water discharged through a small orifice in the containing vessel, says an article in the Montreal Family Herald. If the vessel would empty itself between sunrise and sunset, a certain number of markings equally distant on the side of the vessel would enable one to tell what portion of the day had passed by the height of the water. This crude measure of time was called a water-clock.

When the Roman general, Julius Caesar, was carrying out his conquest of Gaul, he crossed to Britain for the first time in the latter part of the summer of 55 B. C. in his account of the expedition he tells of many things he had observed among the Britons, and one was the water-clock. Through accurate measurements by this clock he found that the midsummer nights in Britain were shorter than in the south of Gaul or Italy. He ascertained the fact, but he did not know the cause—the spherical form of the earth and its revolving on its axis not at right angles to the plane of its orbit.

String of Amber Beads Sheds Light on History

A "human bridge" to Asia was discovered by Horace McCracken, leader of a scientific expedition into Alaska looking up some anthropological subjects. The "bridge" was the finding of a stone-age mummy string of amber beads that may determine the fact that America's first settlers came from the west. Because of their fear of invoking the displeasure of the spirits, natives would give little to ancient burial places, but finally an old fellow was found who knew of such a place and he was induced to reveal it, although he would not visit it. The clue which he gave resulted in the success of the expedition. In a cave on a remote island they found four mummies, one probably that of a tribal leader or chief, as he was surrounded by a collection of furs, trinkets and ancient implements. Another had a string of amber beads about the neck and these are what connected the Alaskan races with the Orientals, for it is stated with authority that the beads could have come only from Korea.

Altogether Too Frank

Fishing, perhaps, for a little adulation, the eighth-grade teacher told her pupils to write a theme telling just what they thought of her.

"Please be absolutely frank, now," she urged.

Eleven-year-old Virginia, not yet wise enough in the ways of the world to realize that frankness is merely a pious ideal that meets vindictive oppression and punishment in practice, wrote:

"I think you're brutal. I don't like you. I think you're mean to me and to the other children..." and so on for two pages.

Poor Virginia.—Chicago Evening Post.

Wilson was on his way home from the station. When he was about three miles from the village and about a mile from his home he saw a man approaching him from the opposite direction.

"Excuse me, sir," said the stranger, "I have met, 'do you happen to have seen a policeman anywhere about?'"

"I'm afraid I haven't seen one for over two miles," returned Wilson unsuspectingly.

"Good!" snapped the stranger, changing his tone of voice. "Hurry home and give me your watch and pocketbook then."

The Dividing Line

The great distinction between teachers, sacred or literary—between poets like Pope—between philosophers like Spinoza, Kant and Coleridge, and philosophers like Locke, Paley and Stewart—between men of the world who are reckoned accomplished talkers, and there a fervent mystic prophesying, half insane under the influence of his thought—is that one class speaks from within, or from experience, as parties and possessors of the fact; and the other class from without, as spectators merely.—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

Somewhat Disturbing

A man was in the habit of opening his Bible at random and taking the first thing his eye alighted upon as something that would be helpful to him.

One day the first verse he read was, "Judas went out and hanged himself," and not finding this quite suitable he shut the book and opened it again at another place. The verse his eyes fell upon was, "Go thou and do likewise."

He tried again, and this time, to his amusement, he read, "What thou doest, do quickly."

School Work Will Start Monday in Cottage Grove

Regular Class Work Scheduled for Tuesday; Teaching Positions Filled.

The Cottage Grove schools will resume Monday morning. Class assignments will be given and short periods will be held in the high school that day and regular class work will start Tuesday. For the grades Monday will be given over to a physical examination for all students, with regular class work scheduled for Tuesday.

Pre-registration for the high school has been held this week but enrollment figures are still incomplete, according to Superintendent Emerson. One of the unusual features noted is the exceptionally large number of students from out side districts enrolling in the four classes.

With the signing of Miss Violet Mills of Prineville as music supervisor all teaching positions in the city schools have been filled. Miss Mills was music supervisor last year in Roseburg. She is a graduate of University of Oregon, where she majored in music, and is a member of Mu Phi Epsilon, honorary music organization. Miss Mills will teach music in the grades and orchestra in the high school.

She probably will teach one class of English in the high school.

Miss Beatrice Turtle, school health nurse, has completed a number of physical examinations. Children entering the grades must have a physical examination before they may register. A clinic will be held Wednesday in the high school at which the Schick test will be given those who had the toxin-antitoxin inoculation last year.

O. M. Bagley, new high school coach, has arrived to take over his duties. Miss Sara Louise Shields, new home economics teacher, has moved into the practice house, where she will stay with Miss Merle Bowen.

The first teachers' meeting will be held at 2:30 Saturday afternoon.

REV. LOUIS H. RANDLE IS LIQUOR CLUB SPEAKER

Rev. Louis Henry Randle, pastor of the Baptist church, spoke at the Lions club meeting Thursday noon on "City Life in China." Rev. Randle spent seven years in the interior of China as a missionary.

Selection of a major activity for the year's work of the club was discussed. A number of suggestions were made but final action was deferred.

O. M. Bagley, new high school coach, and Dr. R. H. Rields were guests.

Fast Work

Mike was engaged to do a job of painting for Mr. Smith. After a while he came in saying the job was completed and asked for his money.

"But, Mike, I wanted two coats on that building. I'll pay you after the second coat," said Mr. Smith.

"You've got it," said Mike. "I mixed the first coat with the paint for the second and put on both coats at the same time. Speed is my motto."

Too Much

Mutt, as the family dog is very appropriately named, thoroughly enjoys automobile riding, and he was expressing his joy the other day by leaping gaily from the back seat to the front and treading with heavy paws upon every one in transit. Sunny, his little master, became surfeited with this procedure, and exclaimed in exasperation, "Look here, Mutt, I don't like so much dogness!"

Mania for Degrees

Frenchmen have a mania for degrees, titles, and other excuses for putting letters after their names. A Parisian banker received a visiting card from a gentleman requesting an interview with something like this after the name: Member of the Institute, Town Councillor of the Somme, Member of the Association for Municipal Reform, Contributor to the "Journal de Geneve," etc. Taking one of his own cards the banker wrote, under his plain name: "Member of the Taxicab Using Public, Contributor to the Paris Gas company, Martyr of the Paris Telephone service, etc., is too occupied with his own business to receive visitors today."
