CAN I Learn to Fly?

WILLIAM R. NELSON

Flying in the Wind

WIND is a factor in flying, the same as it is in auto driving. The embryo pilot soon learns it is likely to upset his judgment of distance and his ability to maneuver the plane in normal flight far more than it affects his handling of an automobile.

Take-offs and landings were just becoming routine for me when a windy day came along. That breeze changed everything. "In taking out, be careful not to make your signag turns too pronounced," my instructor cautioned. "If the wind catches the plane squarely from the side, it will probably turn the ship around and you will not be able to stop the turn."

I zig-zagged gingerly all of the way going out and just as we reached our starting point a gust hit us sideways and we made a half turn before I could stop. My instructor grinned back at me. By blasting the motor for short spurts I managed to turn into the wind as instructed, and we were off.

"Keep the tail down slightly today," he advised through the speaking tube. "Keep the wings up (level) and be careful not to climb too rapidly."

We were in the air after the shortest run I had experienced. Our climb was rapid, but not unusual and first one then the other wing would drop below the correct level position. As we leveled out at 1,000 feet I noticed that our airspeed dropped to about sixty miles an hour when I set the motor speed to 1,450 r. p. m. for the normal cruising speed of seventy miles an hour.

"Make all of your movements steady. Don't peek at the controls. If a wing drops, bring it up, but don't do so too quickly. It may come up of its own accord."

Going around the field to come in for the landing, that breeze messed up my flying so much. I was anything but relaxed as we slid earthward. I leveled out of the glide too soon and apparently worked the stick backward too rapidly.

"Gum it, quick!" he shouted.

I did so automatically at his command. He yanked the stick suddenly and we "set down" and stopped. The slowing down run after touching the ground, like that before the take-off, was very short. (© 1930, Western Newspaper Union.)

Ancient Glass

The residents of ancient Pompeii used glass in their windows, but as late as the Fourteenth century Richard II issued a writ to scour England to find enough glass to repair the windows in just one castle, and near the close of the Seventeenth century all of the great towns in Italy, with the exception of Genoa, used paper in their windows. For centuries glass was regarded as a luxury, and taxes accordingly, down to recent times. Discovered by the Phoenicians, according to Pliny the Second, modern manufacturing methods have made glass so common today that no one gives it a thought. But the windows of America's first homes were provided only with parchment or oiled paper.

Credit to Aristotle

By study we learn that the two greatest men of the world were both horsemen. Aristotle was the world's first schoolmaster and the world's first scientist. He taught school, we read, in the open, and all of his pupils were taught to ride horseback. Aristotle is identified as the tutor of Alexander the Great. It was none other than Aristotle who taught Alexander to ride the wild horse, Bucephalus. Aristotle wrote a book of a thousand or more pages on horses. He said, in that book, all there was to say of the subject and any man writing at length of the horse since then dares not venture far without quoting Aristotle.

SPRING FESTIVAL PLANNED BY CONSTITUTIONAL CLUB

A spring festival, sponsored by the Constitutional club, will be an event of Thursday evening, May 7, in the old armory room in the Masonic building. A pageant will be presented by the music pupils of Miss Esther Silby. Miss Silby will be assisted in directing the pageant by Mrs. Ora Read Hemenway.

Following the entertainment a jitney supper will be served. Four refreshment booths have been planned and will be in charge of the following: Mrs. C. E. Frost, chairman of the winter booth; Mrs. Schofield Stewart, chairman of the autumn booth; Mrs. H. B. Griggs, chairman of the summer booth; Mrs. Charles Beldier, chairman of the spring booth; Mrs. W. E. Lebow, chairman of the decorating committee; Mrs. James P. Graham, chairman of advertising and tickets; Mrs. Bert Trask, chairman of general arrangements. Proceeds from the entertainment will be used for lodge room furnishings.

CRESWELL BIBLE CLASS QUINTEZ DEFEATS LOCALS

A high school bible class basketball team from Creswell defeated the high school bible class quintet of the local Methodist church 22 to 20 Tuesday night on the high school gymnasium floor. The game was closely contested throughout.

A social was held at the church following the game. Forty young people from the two communities were in attendance. The evening was spent with games and music. Refreshments of pie and punch were served cafeteria style.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE NAMES WELLS DELEGATE

At the forum luncheon Tuesday of the chamber of commerce H. C. Wells was elected a delegate to attend the Willamette Valley Waterway association meeting in Portland Friday. Dr. H. A. Hagen, C. E. Stewart and Mr. Wells will represent the local chamber at the Lane county chamber of commerce Thursday night in Eugene. It was announced that H. E. Cully, chairman of the agriculture committee worked the state department of agriculture authorized by the recent legislature.

Orval Etter, a student representing the high school, was present and invited the group to the high school's "open house" to be held Wednesday night of next week. In issuing the invitation he stated that a number of the departments were being conducted along new lines this year and would afford interesting features for the exhibit.

Air Service Wins Suit

A verdict for the defendants was returned in the circuit court at Portland last week in the $10,000 damage suit filed against the Shields-Clark flying service by Ethel Rose for the death of her daughter, Edythe Rose, in an airplane crash. The accident occurred near Lynx Hollow, west of Walker, in October, 1929, when the machine crashed on the top of a butte and caught fire, burning its three occupants to death. Miss Rose had gone the plane as a relief pilot on a photographing expedition to Klamath Falls timber tracts in company with William Beverly Clark, filer, and Frank Mercer, aerial photographer. The company was held by the court as protected by a release signed by Miss Rose and further decreed that there was no evidence of negligence by the company.

Noble Birth Signified by Saxon Title "Earl"

"Earl" is our oldest title of nobility, says an article in the London Daily Mail. "The early Saxon 'eorl' meant a person of noble birth, as opposed to the ordinary freeman or 'ceorl.' With the rise of a nobility based on service rather than blood (the gentry and the nobles) the title slipped into the background, but Canute used the title for the governors of the great provinces of Wessex, Mercia, Northumbria, etc., which had been kingdoms before England was united.

"After the Norman conquest earl became the title of the head of certain counties, carrying with it the right to a share (the third penny) of the dues of the county court. But there were only a few of such earls, and they were very soon ousted from their administrative functions by the sheriffs, leaving the rank merely titular.

"But during this short period they bore a close likeness to the French count; and since the Saxon earl had no special feminine title, the vague lady, their wives acquired the title 'countess.'"

First English in America

Walker's "Essentials in English History" says: "The beginning of English colonization is due to the statesmanship of Walter Raleigh. Although erratic and visionary in many respects, Raleigh saw clearly that attacks on Spanish ports or vessels were a poor method of fighting Spain. He appears to have been the first to conceive the idea of opposing Spain by insuring her special domain, the American continent, and erecting there against Spanish dominance a lasting bulwark by planting colonies along its coast. Drake might plunder and burn, but Raleigh preferred to plant and settle. In 1585 he sent Sir Richard Grenville to Roanoke island with a colony of 100 persons; in 1587 he sent John White with 150 more, and although both these attempts failed, yet they laid the next reign to the more lasting work of the Virginia company."

Dr. K. K. Clarke to Speak.
Dr. K. K. Clarke of Yoncalla will present a dramatic bible monolog at the evening service Sunday at the local Methodist church. A young people's gospel team from the local church will have charge of the evening services in Yoncalla.

Attention has been called by Rev. Ira Aldrich, pastor, to the fact that beginning Sunday the hour for the evening services will be changed to a later hour. The young people's service will be held at 7 o'clock and the regular preaching service at 8 o'clock.
