NOW FOR BUSINESS.
The penitentiary investigation is over, and things were found not to be as bad as they were painted.

The stirring up of things at the state capitol is likely to put all state officials on the qui vive. It was hardly fair that a capable official had to be attacked to bring this about, but that is the way with holding public office.

Governor Meier has the ability and the inclination to give the state a strictly business administration. If he will get down to doing that in the same dignified way that it is done in private business, he will have the whole-hearted cooperation of Secretary of State Hoss, who with Treasurer Kay, had his feet on the brakes before the governor got on the job.

It is time to cut out kid's play and get down to the business in hand. As for the institutions of higher learning, the presidents of the university and college are getting down to brass tacks in a way that means education should cost less than it has for many years, with no injury to students.

YES, WE AGREE.
In an editorial headed, "On This We Agree," Editor William Tugman of the Eugene Guard, graciously, as is his wont, comes at least half way to our way of thinking that it is not well to expose the young to a "wilderness of wild ideas without guidance or discipline, especially the latter."

We are not quite certain what the erudite William meant when he said, "Many of those things which are novel and exciting so long as they are veiled and forbidden mysteries soon lose their power to charm when they are made the subject of normal intelligent observation and study," but we opine that he may have been speaking wistfully and approvingly of the new long dresses.

Editor William has traveled part way on the road we suggested in the rearing of a brood, and he speaks wisely when he does not boast of the wonders he is going to perform as the male head of the household. Undoubtedly he will of ten believe he has done better than his children's grandparents did with their children, but there will be equally as many times when he will doubt whether he has the stamina to see the job through.

A COMPLIMENT THIS TIME.
The Sentinel has offered what probably has passed for criticism of the state's chief executive, but it is always more pleasant to say a kind word. During the several weeks which this writer recently spent at Salem, the door to the executive chamber was always open. If the governor wasn't engaged with someone else, those who entered the waiting room were frequently greeted by the chief executive himself and invited to enter. Real democracy such as this is commendable.

The Sentinel has its own theory as to the reason for the dirt storm of last week. The mud thrown at the penitentiary hearing had had time to dry out and was being scattered by the wind.

Breathes there a boy with ambition so dead who never to himself hath said that some time he is going to be a great orator and startle the nation.

The wise shoe clerk never guesses the right size of a woman's foot. The bustle is coming back into style, a fashion note says. "Coming back" into style is the proper way of expressing it.

When a man falls, it is hard luck; when he succeeds, it is good judgment. The finger of scorn points the way to oblivion.
